No Room On Earth for BullyNations, Hull Warns

No Controversy Can Arise That Cannot Be Settled Peaceably, He Tells Red Cross

In a speech broadcast to Europe and South America, Secretary of State Hull said last night that there is not "room on this earth" for a single nation or a group of nations that would try to "enslave and dominate all the others."

Secretary Hull's speech, which came three days before Adolf Hitler's scheduled reply to President Roosevelt's ten-year peace proposal, was delivered at the annual convention dinner of the American Red Cross in the Mayflower Hotel.

Earlier President Roosevelt told the Red Cross delegates that their mission of mercy was in striking contrast to the "inhumane acts" in a war-haunted world.

Red Cross 75 Years Old

The Red Cross, conceived by Henri Dunant, a Swiss, after he heard the anguished cries of the wounded at the battle of Solferino in Italy, was born at Geneva 75 years ago. Secretary Hull recalled this and then went on to tell how modern war, with its bombing planes, has extended the front until women and children, the old and the feeble also are destined for slaughter.

"And all this—to what end?" Hull asked.

"Nations," he continued, "have most frequently resorted to war on the plea that it is the only method open to them for redressing wrongs or the only means left to them of settling international differences. For neither of these purposes is war the best of the remedies available to man, or, in fact, a remedy at all.

"There is no controversy, no difference that can arise between nations, which could not be settled with far greater benefit to all concerned, by the peaceful processes of friendly adjustment than by resort to armed force."

Ample Room for All

Whenever nations resort to war as an instrument of policy, Hull said, sooner or later conditions arise in which peaceful and peace-loving nations prefer armed defense to subjection and slavery.

"There is ample room on this earth for the 2,000,000,000 human beings who inhabit it," the State Department head said, with feeling. "There are ample known resources of materials and skill to enable all nations to enjoy a high level of economic prosperity and to face a future of continued plenty.

"But there has never been, and there is not today room on this earth for a political organization of mankind under which a single nation or group of nations will enslave and dominate all the others."

Hull conceded that some nations are more generously endowed than

Indians, in Ornamental Dress, Prove Sensation in Capital On Eve of Three-Day Festival

A unique assortment of visitors descended upon Washington yesterday—partly to see the sights, but principally to let Washington see them at the National Folk Festival, which opens tomorrow night at Constitution Hall for a three-day run.

First of the performers to report at festival headquarters were a dozen young Lithuanian dancers. After a busy morning, which concluded with the long climb to the Capitol dome, the energetic youngsters dressed in colorful costumes and adjourned to Franklin Park to rehearse their intricate dance steps.

Led by Vytautas Beliajus, folk dance director of the Chicago park district, they will appear in a recital tomorrow evening at the King-Smith Playhouse. Their festival performances are scheduled for Saturday afternoon and evening.

Science Honor Given Cook on Ice-Bound Ship

Norwegian Conducted Ocean Studies Frozen In on Amundsen Craft

A modest Norwegian scientist, Harald Ulrik Sverdrup, who last night was awarded a high honor for oceanographic research, confessed that his best work was accomplished because he was frozen in for six Arctic winters on the Maud, famous exploration ship of Sir Roald Amundsen. When the ship could move, Sverdrup did the cooking and had no time for research.

The scientist, now director of the Scripps Institution of Oceanography of the University of California, received the Agassiz Medal at the closing banquet of the National Academy of Science annual meeting.

Sverdrup was in charge of scientific work of the Maud when he was only 30, in 1918. According to Dr. T. Wayland Vaughan, who presented the medal, the oceanographer had an unbroken record as a producer of brilliant scientific papers "except while he was frozen in the ice of the North Siberian shelf," a circumstance which occurred regularly in 1918, 1919 and 1920, and again in 1922, 1923 and 1924.

On the last trip, Amundsen and his expedition were isolated from all news of civilization for three years and two months.

Sverdrup, a Knight of St. Olaf, member of the Oslo Academy of Science and recipient of many other awards, was also in charge of scientific work on Sir Hubert Wilkins' Artic submarine, the Nautilus.

In accepting the medal Sverdrup said that the greatest difficulty of his work in the Arctic was "the feeling of uncertainty . . . which cannot be dispelled because there

90-Degree Heat Equals Record

Summer heat struck Washington for the second day yesterday, with a temperature of 90 degrees which again was the highest in the East. The temperature equaled the all-time record for April 25, set in 1921.

Slightly cooler weather is promised here today, with occasional showers.

15 Say They Played Policy; Out as Jurors

Eleven Chosen to Try Carroll Bailey Charged In Numbers Racket

Fifteen members of a District Court jury panel yesterday were excused from serving in the trial of Carroll Bailey, charged with racketeering, when they admitted they had played the numbers within the past two years.

Eleven jurors had been selected when Justice Adkins recessed court after nearly two hours questioning of the panel.

Bailey has just completed a four-month term in the Federal Reformatory at Petersburg, Va., after being convicted of income tax evasion in the Federal District Court of Baltimore. He also was fined $5,000.

In the present case Bailey is accused of numbers operations from an establishment in the 900 block of Second street northeast, raided by police January 29, 1938.

Also on trial on the same charge are Leonard D. McKay and Horton S. Grinder, both of whom police claim they found at the Second street house. Four other defendants have already pleaded guilty.

Atlantic Service Matter of Weeks, Air Official Says

Baltimore, April 25 (AP).—Pan American Airways today announced itself ready to start regular transatlantic passenger flights "within a few short weeks."

Christening of the Atlantic Clipper, sister ship of the Yankee Clipper which recently completed a round-trip inspection flight to Europe, brought from Pan American's President Juan T. Tripple assurance that:

"The super-clippers . . . represent new standards for the entire aviation world. They are fit and ready—for the next great step."

Million Face British Draft; Taxes Soar

$6,000,000,000 Needed for Record Peace-Time Budget, Half for Defense

By the Associated Press.

London, April 25.—The British government announced heavy new taxes today to meet its gun-swollen budget of £1,320,000,000 ($6,177,600,000) and was said to have decided upon compulsory military training to increase further its defense preparations.

Approximately half — nearly £630,000,000 ($2,948,400,000)—of the expenditures for the fiscal year which started April 1 are to be for the armed forces and civilian defense and even more may be needed, Sir John Simon, chancellor of the exchequer, told Parliament.

Military conscription at first likely will be applied as physical training and elementary military instruction for a limited number of young men, but a government bill is expected to authorize full conscription if war comes.

Chamberlain Sees King

Prime Minister Chamberlain saw King George after a two-hour meeting of the cabinet. It was believed he placed before the sovereign his reasons for deciding to put the nation in arms.

Chamberlain also was believed to have given the King an outline of the international situation and of the announcement of conscription which the Prime Minister is expected to make in Commons tomorrow or Thursday.

Late tonight Commons agreed to all the new taxes proposed by Simon.

The cabinet was reported to have decided in extraordinary session tonight on conscription for men between 18 and 21, affecting more than 1,000,000 men.

[A special cabinet committee was appointed to draft the conscription bill, International News Service reported. It was said the committee might frame a measure calling to the colors all men up to 25. This extension, the dispatch said, would make approximately 2,000,000 men available for service. — Editor's note.]

May Bolster Alliance

Semiofficial circles now acknowledge that to tell Reichsfuehrer Hitler of the British conscription intentions was the reason Sir Nevile Henderson was ordered back to his post of Ambassador to Germany—which he left March 17 after Germany demolished Czecho-Slovakia as a political entity.

Announcement of conscription was expected to strengthen the Anglo-French alliance with the likelihood that Soviet Russia would enter the bloc soon and that Turkey would follow. Russia and France were said to have insisted upon the draft as necessary to assure British strength in the front of nations.

The Ambassador to Berlin was unable to see the German foreign minister and the possibility existed

'Davey' Lewis To Get U. S. Mediator Job

Man Tydings Beat To Replace Leiserson Who Takes Smith's Job on Labor Board

President Roosevelt made it clear yesterday that he would appoint former Representative David J. Lewis, Maryland, defeated last year in the Administration's ill-fated purge attempt against Senator Tydings, to a $10,000-a-year membership on the National Meditation Board.

Lewis would succeed William M. Leiserson, board chairman, who was named yesterday to the position on the National Labor Relations Board held by Donald Wakefield Smith.

Although Smith, around whose head a storm of controversy has raged, was given a recess reappointment last summer, the President had neglected to send his nomination to the Senate for confirmation. It was well known that, if the nomination had been sent up, the effect would have been to intensify the Congressional attack on the labor board and the Wagner labor act.

Received Favorably

The Leiserson appointment is looked upon as a strategic appeasement move designed to head off the movement for radical revision of the Wagner act and confine revision to a few minor changes.

The appointment was favorably received in the Senate, causing Democratic leaders to predict confirmation without great difficulty. Leiserson's record as an expert in labor problems and skillful mediator extends back for 30 years. Moreover, the Mediation Board is regarded as an excellent example of what the Government can achieve as third party in labor disputes.

The Administration's original plan, it is reported, was to name Lewis to the Labor Board to succeed Smith. The organized fight against the Wagner act is believed to be responsible for the change.

Smith has been bitterly opposed by the American Federation of Labor on the ground that he had shown favoritism to the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Reticent on Smith

In response to a question at his press conference, the President said it was a good guess that Lewis would be appointed to the Mediation Board post. He declined to comment, however, when asked whether he had any plans for Smith.

Lewis, ardent New Dealer and liberal member of the House for many years, entered the tournament against Tydings last summer at the behest of the Administration. He was badly defeated, although the President campaigned for him personally.

Leiserson was appointed to the Labor Board for a five-year term. His nomination was referred to the Senate Education and Labor Committee, which is considering proposals for modification of the Wagner act.

Tip Reveals $6,000 in Jewels Cached in Union Station Locker

Mystery Phone Call Leads to Gems Socialite Left in Taxi Sunday

A mysterious telephone tip last night restored missing jewelry valued at $6,000 to a socially prominent New York woman, who had left it in a Washington cab on a visit to her parents in Alexandria Sunday.

The socialite, Mrs. George Plumer Smith, jr., the former Ruth Bryant, of Alexandria, hurried back to Washington from New York yesterday to identify the jewels after they had been found in a Union Station locker as a result of the anonymous tip to a newspaperman.

The missing valuables included a $2,000 necklace of matched pearls, a four-carat diamond flanked with six baguette gems set in a $3,500 platinum ring, and other ornaments. They were recovered untouched, packed in a tan morocco leather case.

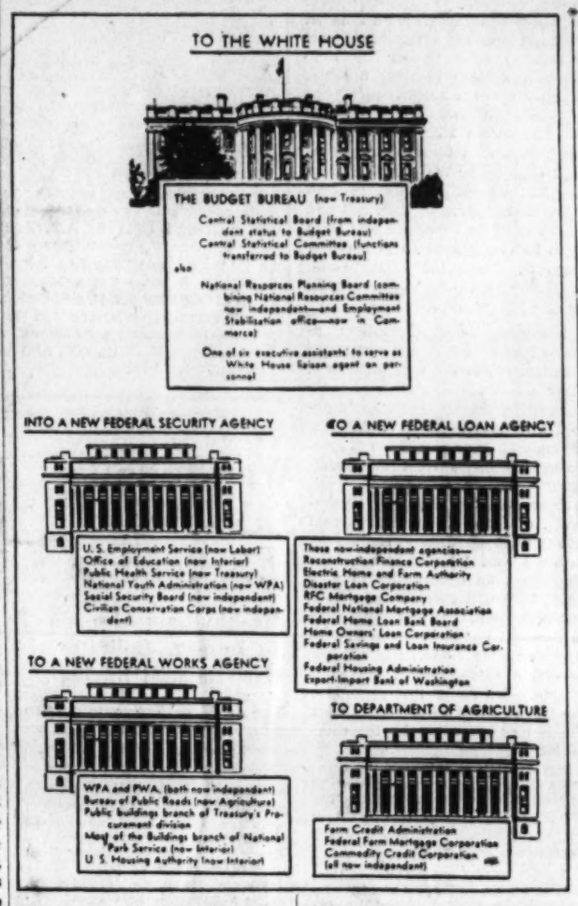

Police are seeking ten taxi drivers who had been tentatively identified through photos in the hack inspector's office as the driver of the cab which took the Smiths from Union Station Sunday to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur H. Bryant, 501 Washington street, Alexandria.

Police here were working on the theory that the taxi operator, on discovering the contents of the case, had cached it in the locker with the idea of selling it through underworld "fences." The driver then lost his nerve, and himself tipped off the reporters they believed.

First Merger Order Wins Senate Praise; Two More to Follow

Security, Lending, Works Co-ordinated In 3 New Agencies; House Veto Sought

95,000 Jobs Affected

APPROXIMATELY 95,000 Government employes, including 30,000 in Washington, were awaiting the effect of the President's reorganization plans upon their jobs.—Page 14.

Senate for Merger

By Robert C. Albright.

President Roosevelt yesterday laid before Congress a comprehensive "Reorganization Plan No. 1," consolidating Federal welfare, works and lending activities under three independent Government arms and centralizing the Budget Bureau and related agencies under the White House.

Offered for "only one supreme purpose—to make democracy work," the plan was well received in the Senate but encountered a sharp cross-fire of Republican criticism in the House. Representative Taber, of New York, ranking minority member of the House Reorganization Committee, today will offer a concurrent resolution of disapproval.

After lapse of 60 days, this first exercise of the President's reorganization powers will become law unless both houses of Congress meantime adopt such a resolution. Two additional plans, ordering new intra-departmental and interdepartmental shifts, will be sent to Congress beginning next week.

Many Agencies Shuffled

Here is how the three new independent agencies will merge existing units and activities under the reorganization plan:

Federal Security agency—Will take over the Social Security board in entirety; the Office of Education, from the Interior Department; the Public Health Service, from the Treasury; the National Youth Administration, from the WPA; the United States Employment Service, from the Labor Department, and the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The office of director of the employment service would be abolished and that agency's functions would be administered by the Social Security Board as part of its unemployment compensation work.

Federal works agency—Will take over all of WPA and PWA and their functions; the Bureau of Public Roads, from the Agriculture Department; the Public Buildings branch of the Procurement division, from the Treasury; the Branch of Buildings Management of the National Park Service, from the Interior Department; the space assignment and site selection work of the National Park Service in the District, and the United States Housing Authority, from the Interior Department.

In this set-up, the Bureau of Public Roads would become the Public Roads Administration, under a commissioner. The Public Buildings branch of the Procurement Division and the Branch of Buildings Management of the Park Service, would become the Public Buildings Administration, under a commissioner. The PWA and WPA would continue as subordinate agencies, each under a commissioner.

Federal Loan Agency—Will coordinate the activities of the following agencies: Reconstruction

Kappel, Jailed 37 Times, Gets 1st Prison Term

Gambler Convicted Of Armed Robbery Of Numbers Runners

Arrested 37 times since he was 11 years old, William "Dutch" Kappel, Washington gambler, yesterday began his first prison term immediately after a District Court jury convicted him of armed robbery. The verdict carries a 3 to 15 year sentence. Sentence was not imposed.

The florid, heavy-set "Dutch," who testified he had been a gambler ten years, was accused of robbing two numbers operators, Wallace Beach and Wallace Hulse, of $1,650 November 21. The jurors deliberated two and one-half hours.

First Alibi Failed

Assistant District Attorney William Hitz in closing arguments before Justice Proctor yesterday morning asserted Kappel had changed his story after an original alibi given police was exploded.

Kappel, according to Detective Sergt. Paul E. Ambrose, claimed at the time of his arrest he had been drinking beer in a Fourteenth street restaurant when the robbery was committed.

After testimony by the proprietor of the establishment showing he had no liquor license November 21, however, "Dutch" claimed on the stand his beer drinking took place in a different establishment.

Blames "Shakedown"

After leaving the restaurant, the gambler said, he went to a friend's apartment where whisky and another case of beer were ordered. A switchboard operator from the apartment was unable to state whether the order was telephoned by Kappel.

Kappel maintained throughout the trial he was victim of a "shakedown against an innocent man."

The nomination was announced by Dr. John A. O'Brien, director of the Newman Foundation at the University of Illinois, which each year confers the honor on "an individual who has made an outstanding contribution to the enrichment of American life in the fields of science, literature, art or statesmanship."

Dewey will be given the gold medal struck in the memory of the late John Henry Cardinal Newman on May 2.

Directory Lists D. C. Facilities For Recreation

Nearly 400 Subjects In Book Prepared With Aid of The Post

A directory of all the schools and institutions in the District of Columbia where adults may enjoy educational and recreational facilities, became available for the first time yesterday, through the efforts of the committee on Research of the Adult Education Association of the District, in co-operation with The Washington Post.

Indexed under nearly 400 subjects, the 16 pages of the publication also are cross-indexed to show the reader what institutions are available for his instruction in almost any knowledge or skill he may desire. Archery, fencing, pharmacy, government, accountancy, first aid, fishing, horseshoe pitching, swimming, dramatics, music, art, office training, typewriting, wrestling and wood-carving are some of the items. Those who engaged in the research have stated that the existing facilities show both duplication and gaps.

Thanks Expressed

Copies of the directory are now available gratis at the office of The Washington Post, and 31 other points throughout the District, including libraries, schools, social service agencies, and hotels. The full list appears below. Others may be added later.

Members of the committee on research of the Adult Education Association are: Chairman, Mrs. George Barnes Galloway, of the board of directors of the Family Service Association; Miss Maude E. Aiton, principal of the Webster Americanization School; Miss Mary Edith Coulson, assistant secretary of the Council of Social Agencies; Mrs. David Cushman Coyle, chairman of the Washington Committee of the Institute of Women's Professional Relations; Miss Jessie M. Robbins, of the National Education Association; Mrs. Helen M. Steinbarger, consultant in adult education, Public Library; Dr. G. C. Wilkinson, first assistant superintendent in charge of colored schools, and Chester S. Williams, assistant administrator of Forums, United States Office of Education.

The National Education Association loaned office space and made available the services of Miss Jessie

CAPITAL SMALLTALK: Tommy Corcoran, the frank-and-earnest "mystery man" of the White House, is back on the job, wearing what he calls "my $3,000 coat of tan," and looking better than he has in years. Before his operation he had a tendency toward midnight pallor, from too much night work, and he was gone from his desk about 10 weeks.

U. & U.

Mr. Corcoran . . . $3,000 tan

The $3,000 represents loss of pay, the cost of two operations, a trip to Florida—and phone tolls. He spends more than $100 a month phoning (out of his own pocket) even when he's in the Capital. Just doesn't bother to collect phone tolls incurred at his apartment on official business. Pays 'em out of his $10,000 salary. This indulgence would make the hair of most Congressmen (who get the same salary) stand up.

Corridor gossip has it that Tommy has lost his inside track because he was away so long, but two tales seem to disprove this . . .

The other is that when summoned to the White House urgently for lunch at 12:30 the other day, he phoned back and told "Frank" that he couldn't possibly make it till 1 o'clock.

One explanation for both stories is that he may have been talking to Frank Murphy, not Frank Roosevelt.

When you get fed there you stay fed, until the next meal.

*There must, I imagine, be some lively curiosity, about these three kitchens. That, at least, is what the b. w. surmises, and at White House parties she watches the Justices to see if they sneak off for a peek at the First Lady's cooking arrangements . . . "What ever happened about Amlie?" she asked him, for no reason at all. "I sent my withdrawal to the President today," said the gentleman . . . His murmured name, though not quite caught, had reminded her of the Amlie case.

Slipper-fitters say the trouble is different than with Cinderella's; they can't find many feet big enough. It's a dull dinner or cocktail party that doesn't produce a new candidate or two. Usually his name comes to you as an inside tip, in a hushed voice, direct from his own inner sanctum.

The Army is pretty proud of its new semiautomatic rifle which can be fired 80 to 100 times a minute by a dextrous expert rifleman. Its kick against the shoulder is much less than the present rifles, and it's a good weapon against low-flying aircraft. It has no bolt to be yanked by hand, which eliminates a serious distraction, and makes it possible to train soldiers more quickly as good marksmen . . . Actually, it's intended to shoot 50 times a minute, against about 30 for the older rifle, though a soldier rarely has occasion in battle to shoot that fast.

By the way, I thought such a new weapon would be treated sorta secretively; but two pages of drawings which seem to tell all about the gun have been published and are available to any spy . . . But the Army says even the Germans would find it a lot of work to copy the gun, with all their skill.

Milk Hearing Date To Be Set Today

Public hearings in the District milk investigation probably will not begin before next week, Chairman Bates, of the House subcommittee on public health, said yesterday. The subcommittee will meet today to decide on a date.

Estil W. Smith, accountant, of Ashland, Ky., yesterday was appointed investigator. Miss Julia Castleman, of Martinsburg, W. Va., was named secretary-stenographer.

House Group Votes for Wage Exemptions

Committee Also Sets May 4 for Labor Act Hearings

Amendments to the wage-hour law exempting certain classes of agricultural and white-collar workers were indorsed yesterday by the House Labor Committee, as Chairman Norton said she would seek to have the proposals taken up by the House early next week under suspension of the rules.

At the same time Mrs. Norton said the committee fixed May 4 as the date for hearings to begin on amendments to the national labor relations act. By setting a time for the hearings the committee is believed to have temporarily sidetracked a move to force a House inquiry into the NLRB.

Senate hearings on proposed changes in the labor act continued yesterday, with Charles Fahy, general counsel for the NLRB, declaring that present procedure in cases against employers is "fair, full and sound (and) so temperate that were it to be changed at all in material respects, means for strengthening it should be sought."

16 to 2 for Changes

The House Labor Committee approved by a 16-2 vote the series of amendments to the wage-hour law, after a last-minute switch of three committee members had insured defeat of a proposal that would have exempted a large proportion of agricultural workers from the provisions of the law.

Representative Barden (Democrat), of North Carolina, advocate of complete agricultural exemption, asserted that "if members of the House get an opportunity to vote on it, they will take all agriculture out of the bill." It was apparently to forestall just such an effort that Representative Norton will attempt to obtain suspension of the rules Monday—for under that procedure the House would be unable to alter the bill as presented by the committee.

Mrs. Norton said that if the committee amendments are opened to further changes in the House "the special interests will tear them to shreds."

Professions Exempted

As reported by the committee, the wage-hour act would be amended to exempt, from the 44-hour per week limitation, white-collar workers earning $200 a month or more, who are "in a bona fide executive, administrative, professional or local retailing capacity or in the capacity of an outside salesman."

Also exempted from the wage and hour provisions would be workers engaged in the "first processing" of fresh fruit and vegetables, including cleaning, grading and packing. Workers in some operations connected with tobacco and lumber production would be excluded from provisions of the present law, which sets limits of 25 cents per hour and 44 hours a week for the current year.

Workers in a wide variety of agricultural fields would be permitted to work 60 hours per week throughout the year and would also be entirely exempt from hour regulations for 14 weeks every year. Telephone operators on rural exchanges would be exempt, and the administrator would be permitted to freeze the wage of telegraph messengers at 25 cents per hour.

Overtime Rule Changed

The amendments would enable the administrator to permit employers to pay for overtime in time off instead of cash, and provide for a committee to recommend suitable wage and hour limits for the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico, where complaints have arisen against the present law's interference with home manufacturing.

At the Senate hearings on suggested alterations of the Wagner labor act, Fahy told the Education and Labor Committee that proposals to permit removal of proceedings to the district courts "would destroy the act." Scattering of responsibility for administration of the act "among 200 district judges" would be "fatal," he asserted. "Congress," he said, "has never relegated to the judiciary the function of directing the administration of public statutes."

German Quits World War Claims Commission

By the Associated Press.

Dr. Victor Huecking, German member of the mixed claims commission, has quit the tribunal in the midst of his deliberations over Americans' World War sabotage claims, it was learned yesterday, and has been recalled permamently to Berlin.

An authoritative source said his departure "undoubtedly meant that Germany had scant hope of winning the cases."

The claims, totaling $50,000,000, were made by Americans against Germany as a result of the destruction of a railroad terminal at Black Tom, N. J., and an arsenal at Kingsland, N. J., before the United States entered the World War.

Critical Shortage Of Coal Within 2 Weeks Forecast

New York, April 25 (AP).—Labor contract negotiations in the soft coal industry remained deadlocked tonight despite the first day's efforts of the Federal Government's mediator to effect an agreement and return 338,000 miners to work.

Dr. John R. Steelman, chief of the Labor Department's conciliation service, took charge of negotiations as the chairman of the Bituminous Coal Commission estimated that the Nation's supply of soft coal would reach the critical stage, forerunner of an emergency, in two weeks.

Steelman ended the day's conferences by announcing a recess until 10 a. m. (E.S.T.) tomorrow.

Healthy Gain Also In Imports Indicates Raw Material Buying

Due in large degree to foreign sales of war materials, this country's exports reversed a downward trend in March and caused an advance in the favorable trade balance despite a substantial increase in imports, the Commerce Department announced yesterday.

Exports, 20 per cent higher than in February, were valued at $268,364,000 and imports at $190,416,000, leaving a favorable balance of $77,948,000. The February figures were: Exports, $218,560,000; imports, $158,035,000, and the favorable balance, $60,525,000.

Imports advanced in value to the highest level in more than a year.

Raw Materials Bought

A characteristic of the recession period has been an unusually large favorable trade balance, denoting chiefly a sharp falling off in purchases by American industries of foreign raw materials. The increase in imports in recent months has indicated a resumption of foreign raw material buying.

The Federal Reserve Board, meanwhile, announced that manufacturing production this month has been maintained at about the same rate as in March, although, due to the bituminous coal deadlock, mineral output had declined. The board's index of industrial production in March was 98 per cent of the 1923-25 average.

This compared with 99 in the first three months of 1939 and 101 in the last three months of 1938. Industrial output in the first three months of 1039 advanced less than is usual at this season of year.

The Commerce Department attributed the advance in exports to larger sales of manufactured items, chiefly aircraft and metal working machinery. There were increased foreign sales also of manufactured textiles, rubber, chemicals, leather, automobiles and oil.

Exports of grain, for which the Administration has been studying special subsidy and barter aids, decreased.

The export figure still was below the $275,308,000 total for last March. The favorable trade balance for the first three months of 1939 was $173,184,000.

HELP STOMACH DIGEST FOOD
Without Laxatives—and You'll Eat Everything from Soup to Nuts
The stomach should digest two pounds of food daily. When you eat heavy, greasy, coarse or rich foods or when you are nervous, hurried or show poorly—your stomach often pours out too much acid. Your food doesn't digest and you have gas, heartburn, nausea, pain or sour stomach. You feel sour, sick and upset all over.
Doctors say never take a laxative for stomach pain. It is dangerous and foolish. It takes those little black tablets called Bell-ans for indigestion to make the excess stomach acids harmless, relieve distress in no time and put you back on your feet. Relief is so quick it is amazing and one 25c package proves it. Ask for Bell-ans for Indigestion.

A charge that members of Congress "are being led astray by a clique of professional lobbyists who live on contributions from misinformed patriotic organizations," was made yesterday by Chairman Sabath of the House Rules Committee, which will hold the final hearing today on a bill for the imprisonment of deportable aliens.

SABATH

Sabath, an opponent of the projected legislation, said many of the proposed measures affecting aliens would not be offered if the patriotic groups backing them had "correct information." Despite the chairman's opposition, observers thought that the conservatively-minded committee would approve the bill before it today.

This measure by Representative Hobbs (Democrat), of Alabama, provides for the detention of certain aliens against whom deportation orders have been issued but who are refused admission to their native countries. The effect of the bill is limited to aliens who are "members of the anarchistic and similar classes," or who have been convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude, or who have engaged in white slavery or the narcotic traffic.

*Green H. Hackworth, State Department legal adviser, said he considered Bergdoll had lost his citizenship upon his conviction of desertion. Gerard D. # $66,800,000 Ready for Navy Air Defenses

Half Billion Army Bill Goes to Roosevelt; House Approves War Supplies

America's determination to prepare for any emergency was illustrated forcefully yesterday as the naval phase of the emergency defense program became law and two major defense bills were rushed to final passage.

President Roosevelt signed a $66,800,000 authorization bill, under which the Navy plans to immediately establish a chain of air bases in Alaska, the mid-Pacific, Puerto Rico and continental United States. The strategically located outposts are designed to prevent a successful attack on the American continent from either Europe or Asia.

At the same time, the Senate approved and sent to the President the $508,789,824 Army appropriation bill, carrying the first funds for launching the Army expansion program, and the House passed a measure authorizing a $100,000,000 war reserve of essential materials not produced in quantity in the United States.

Mobilization Test Starts

In the Middle West, the Army began a five-day test of its ability to mobilize in time of war. National Guard and Reserve officers were called to active duty at Fort Sheridan, Ill., to co-operate with the Regular Army in ironing out problems which might arise in recruiting a large force in an emergency.

Included in the naval measure is authorization for major air bases at San Juan, Puerto Rico, Kodiak, Alaska, and Jacksonville. The $9,138,000 Puerto Rican base, officials said, will not only guard the approaches of the Panama Canal but its patrol planes can protect most of the east coast of South America. The $8,741,000 Kodiak base is considered of major importance in that it lies athwart the shortest route from the United States to Japan.

Expansion of air power at America's stronghold at Hawaii is provided in the bill, $2,821,000 being allowed for the present Pearl Harbor base and $5,800,000 for an additional operating base at Kaneohe Bay, Hawaii. Four smaller bases would be provided on four mid-Pacific islands—Midway, $5,351,000; Wake, $2,000,000; Johnston, $1,141,000; and Jalmyra, $1,110,000. These are designed as "listening posts"—bases from which long range planes can patrol the western Pacific and warn against the approach of an enemy fleet.

Besides the $17,000,000 base in Florida, intended as the principal air operations center in the Southeast, $1,000,000 is allowed for purchase of land for a similar establishment in the Northeast, at Quonset Point, R. I.

Other provisions of the bill are for secondary bases at Sitka, Alaska, and Tongue Point, Oreg., and expansion of existing facilities at Pensacola, Philadelphia and Norfolk.

Under the record peace-time Army supply bill, $50,000,000 will become available immediately for the purchase of 565 fighting planes, while an additional $44,737,261 will be allowed for air purposes after July 1. Orders for the new planes are to be let immediately, officials said. A total of $53,173,100 is provided for new tanks, semiautomatic rifles, anti-aircraft guns, and other ordnance, although the $110,000,000 for this purpose in the emergency defense program is carried in another appropriation bill.

U. S. Producers Preferred

In passing the war material bill, the House approved an amendment giving American producers preference in laying in the reserve stocks. To encourage production of undeveloped deposits of the urgently needed manganese and other ores, reasonable delivery delays may be permitted American firms.

Another provision seeks to reduce the huge cotton, wheat and other agricultural surpluses by authorizing them to be exchanged for the materials sought under the bill.

A Republican attempt to cut the four-year procurement program to $10,000,000 a year—the figure already approved by the Senate—was voted down, 72 to 23. As the measure goes to conference with the Senate, this feature, as well as a provision of the House bill that the Government must make attempts to collect war debts by crediting against them the purchase price of commodities bought abroad, presents the main differences between the two houses.

Two million dollars is provided for investigation of new deposits, new methods of extraction of low grade ores, and substitutes, but an amendment offered by Western members to "grub-stake" 1,000 prospectors at $50 apiece was voted down.

The Gallup Poll

Public Thinks Many Persons on Relief Could Find Jobs if They Tried

By Dr. George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

New York, April 25.—A national survey of public opinion just completed by the American Institute reveals a widespread public impression that there are many people on relief who could get jobs if they tried. The survey, whose function was to gather and analyze the opinions of a cross-section of voters throughout the country, found that more than six persons in every ten have this impression. Its existence forms one of the important public relations problems of the WPA. So long as voters continue to think that many reliefers in their community could find jobs, sentiment for cutting relief costs is likely to persist.

GEORGE GALLUP

The issue put to voters in all walks of life was:

"Do you think there are any persons on relief in your community who could get jobs in private industry if they tried?"

The results were:

|---|---|
| Yes | 69% |
| No | 31 |

A second question asked voters for their opinion as to about what proportion of persons on relief in their communities could obtain jobs if they tried.

The average figure named was 25 per cent, or one reliefer in every four.

Although the WPA recently found that only 1.3 per cent of relief cases had been carried on the rolls unlawfully, no complete study has been made to determine the number of reliefers who, although eligible for assistance at present, might find work if they tried. The public is apparently convinced that many such cases exist. Regardless of whether this impression is right or wrong, the survey shows clearly what the public's views are.

The survey likewise shows that a large group of persons now on relief think the relief rolls contain persons who could find jobs. Among a cross-section of reliefers interviewed the Institute found approximately two-fifths (38 per cent) believing this, as contrasted to 69 per cent for the Nation as a whole.

An overwhelming majority of Republican voters throughout the country, the survey shows, think many reliefers could find work. A sizable number of Democrats (62 per cent) also believe this.

From an analysis of views expressed by voters there appear to be three principal reasons why the majority think the relief rolls are over-extended. The first is that some reliefers are "lazy" and "wont' take jobs offered them." Second is a belief that some manage to get more money on relief than they could if they worked in private employ, and third, that some reliefers have "lost spirit" and are "afraid to leave."

The minority of voters who feel that reliefers could not get jobs if they tried argue that "no jobs are available now," that people stay on relief only because they have to, and that any jobs they could find might not be satisfactory or permanent.

FHA Expansion Urged by Senate Committee

By the Associated Press.

The Senate Banking Committee yesterday recommended prompt passage of a bill expanding and extending powers of the Federal Housing Administration as necessary "for orderly recovery in business and employment."

The committee noted that despite an upturn last year "private residential building was only about 40 per cent of the 1926 level."

Its report accompanied legislation to increase FHA insurance limits from $3,000,000,000 to $4,000,000,000 and revise and extend numerous activities scheduled to expire July 1.

Georgia Ratifies Bill of Rights

By the Associated Press.

Don't think time has done a back flip, but the Government received official word yesterday that the last of the original 13 States has ratified the Bill of Rights. Georgia's certification arrived at the State Department by registered mail.

This year is the 150th anniversary of the Constitution, and it was thought it would be a good idea for those States which never had ratified the Bill of Rights to catch up with their neighbors. This meant Georgia, Massachusetts and Connecticut.

Congress in Mood For Retrenchment, Byrd Declares

Chicago, April 25 (AP).—Senator Harry F. Byrd (Democrat), Virginia, declared tonight a policy of "spending and borrowing to bring prosperity must be thrown out of the window."

"Congress is in a mood for retrenchment," he told the Illinois Manufacturers Costs Association in a prepared address, "and with executive co-operation, much can be accomplished immediately to restore the country to sound fiscal policies." He contended a program of "excessive spending" has failed to relieve unemployment.

Byrd advocated action to bring about economy and to remove "tax barriers to business progress," and concluded:

"Government, efficiently and economically administered, is our best protection against the undermining of democracy. Financial preparedness is the greatest guarantee of national security."

Hearings On Neutrality Extended

Senate Committee To Hear Additional Witnesses Until May 6

By the Associated Press.

Intense struggle over neutrality legislation was further prolonged today when the Senate Foreign Relations Committee decided to continue its hearings until May 6.

The committee, which has been receiving testimony on a half dozen proposals to amend or kill the law, decided to hear an additional list of witnesses, many of whom were suggested by Senator Johnson (Republican) California. Johnson wants to repeal the law outright, and have the United States take its stand on international law.

Yesterday's action meant that the committee will not make its decision on the neutrality issue before the "cash and carry" provisions of the present law expire May 1.

Temporary Extension

Chairman Pittman (Democrat), Nevada, of the Senate committee indicated that because of the delay, a resolution might be introduced to continue the present "cash and carry" provisions temporarily, pending a decision by Congress on the whole neutrality question. Pittman hopes that the decision will be to permit belligerents to buy arms and all other goods on a "cash and carry" basis.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee heard criticism of Mr. Roosevelt's foreign policy yesterday from Frederick J. Libby, executive secretary of the National Council for Prevention of War. He said the Executive's "war propaganda" was "the chief menace to our people" and asserted that any tacit or open alliance with a "Stop Hitler" coalition might involve this country in Europe's troubles.

Pittman's proposal to sell all kinds of goods on a cash and carry basis won a qualified indorsement from Dr. Walter H. Judd, former medical missionary to China. In testimony before the Senate committee, Judd urged also that separate action, in the form of economic sanctions, be taken against Japan.

Favors Thomas' Plan

In following such a course Dr. Judd recommended that Congress adopt a formula set out in an amendment proposed by Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Utah. Thomas would permit the President, with the approval of Congress, to designate a treaty violator and embargo shipments to such a nation.

Warning that a Japanese victory in China would shut off American markets in that country, Dr. Judd predicted that it would make of Japan "an unbeatable competitor" in the world markets because of the Chinese labor which would be impressed into service.

Senator Johnson asked if it were not likely that retaliatory action by this country against Japan would lead to war. When the witness replied that he did not think so, Johnson said:

"I think we would ultimately have to come to military force—I think we will have to come to it some day, anyway."

World Peace Is U. S. Objective, Wallace Says

New York, April 25 (U.P.).—Secretary of Agriculture Wallace said tonight that United States foreign policy is based on "live and let live," but at the same time this country seeks to "secure and maintain the peace of the world."

Wallace spoke at a dinner given by the New York World's Fair Commission in honor of foreign nations participating in the fair. Representatives of more than 50 countries attended.

A hint the United States might participate in temporary European alliances to maintain peace came as Wallace, asserting the Nation's opposition to outside efforts "to impose on us by internal propaganda or by force any type of government supplanting democracy," quoted from a Congressional message of George Washington as the true expression of America's ideals. The quoted passage said:

"If we remain one people under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance . . . take care always to keep ourselves, by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies."

Dr. Burgan Lauds Philosophy of Goodwill Group

Philosophy of the Goodwill Industries shows appreciation of personality, Dr. H. W. Burgan, pastor of Hamline Methodist Church, said yesterday at ceremonies dedicating the organization's new building at the rear of 1214 New Hampshire avenue.

Ernest Daniel, president of the group's board of directors, dedicated the building "as a place where men and women may find an opportunity to express themselves in creative tasks."

The Rev. Edward Dunlap, of Washington Cathedral, pronounced the invocation, and Dr. Burgan the benediction. Mrs. Ruth Snodgrass sang.

Juries Being Displaced, Says Dr. Lobingier

Trial examiners are displacing juries in the examination of complicated evidence, Dr. Charles P. LLobingier, professor of legal philosophy and evolution at National University, declared last night.

"Growing distrust of the jury is reflected in the law journals and even in the newspapers," he told the Riccobono Seminar of Roman Law in America.

Suicide Corner No. 7

Pedestrian Needs Gifted Powers To Cross 18th and Columbia Rd.

Walker Has No Way of Knowing He Must Go When Light Is Red; Instructing Sign Faces the Wrong Way to Be Read

There is a crossing at Eighteenth street and Columbia road northwest which might easily become a death trap. Here, contrary to all rules of safe walking, the pedestrian is required to cross only on a red light.

But unless he is gifted with powers beyond the ordinary, the pedestrian at this spot has no means of knowing just how or when he is supposed to cross in safety. If he desires to leave the northeast curb in front of the Riggs Bank branch and walk to small island midway to the corner of Eighteenth street, he must do so while the light facing him is red—otherwise right-turning cars from Columbia road surprise him from behind.

There is a small sign attached to the light post which instructs the pedestrian how to cross. But not only is the sign rusty and weather-beaten, it faces the wrong way and couldn't be read unless a person stood within a few feet of it.

Matter of Being Agile

Crossing in the opposite direction at this dangerous spot, the pedestrian has no light—red or green—to guide him and he is apt to come face to face with the same right-turning autos. It is a matter of being agile enough to avoid being hit—there is no other protection.

Another "suicide corner" candidate is Connecticut avenue and Devonshire place. With no lights nor crossing officer to safeguard the walker, a curb to curb journey across Connecticut avenue is a feat in itself when rush-hour traffic is at its height. Heavy bus and vehicular movements north and south frequently make it impossible to cross without a 15-minute wait. Authorities say a traffic light for this corner is on the way—when and if Congress grants enough money.

17th and H Also

Frequent users of the Seventeenth and H street intersection complain that this is another spot where pedestrians "don't get a break." To cross from the northeast to northwest corners, the walker is forced to squeeze his way between a steady stream of right and left turning street cars and autos. Traffic is constantly moving in the path of pedestrians who have a green light for this crossing.

And to cross from the northeast to the southeast curbs, the pedestrian must watch a light on the southwest corner. When it shows green for him to walk, autos and street cars block his way by turning right into H street from Seventeenth on a green arrow at the northwest corner.

Not only do pedestrians contend with street car and auto turns, but this corner has much bus traffic—all making turns along with the trolleys and autos.

Methodists Meet to Unite 3 Branches

900 Delegates and Bishops to Kneel Today in Communion

By the Associated Press.

Kansas City, April 25.—More than 900 delegates and bishops of the three branches of Methodism will kneel in communion service tomorrow morning launching a month-long conference from which the three long-divided groups hope to emerge as one Methodist Church.

The theory of union to end divisions created by a first schism in 1828 and a second in 1844 already has been approved by conferences of the three churches—the Methodist Episcopal, the Methodist Episcopal South and the Methodist Protestant.

The work of the Kansas City uniting conference will be to perfect a discipline under which the nearly 8,000,000 members of the three groups may operate as the largest Protestant church in America.

The 900 voting delegates, working with the 61 bishops of the two Methodist Episcopal Churches and the leader of the hitherto bishopless Protestant branch, must iron out such problems as the financing of missions, creation of a unified youth movement and co-ordination of all the church educational functions.

Child Parley Opens Today At White House

Roosevelt, the Sponsor, To Address 500 Delegates in East Room

Sponsored by President Roosevelt, a national conference to discuss juvenile problems—The White House Conference on Children in a Democracy—will convene at 9:30 a. m. today in the East Room of the White House.

The President, as honorary chairman of the conference, will speak to 500 delegates from the various States, Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and the District. His address will be broadcast over a nation-wide hookup. Mrs. Roosevelt, honorary vice chairman, will follow the President with a brief talk.

The morning session also will hear Mgr. Robert F. Keegan, director of Catholic Charities of the Archdiocese of New York, and Homer Folks, secretary of the State Charities Aid Association of New York. Folks was vice chairman of the first conference on children called by President Theodore Roosevelt in 1909.

Sectional discussions will follow the morning meeting. The conference will determine major issues to be dealt with by committees for consideration at a final conference next spring.

'Motor Murder' Widow Tells Of Relations With Accused

By the Associated Press.

Norwalk, Ohio, April 25.—Attractive Coletta Schlett, widowed by Ohio's "motor murder," bared to a packed courtroom today her illicit relations with Harold Hastings. She declared she last saw her husband alive when he left their home with Hastings.

Hastings stared at Mrs. Schlett as she described an 18-month relationship which, the State charges, prompted him to speed his motor car into Carl Schlett on a blizzardy highway. The State seeks Hastings' death in the electric chair.

"Two or three times a month since June, 1937," Mrs. Schlett said, she had been intimate with the 35-year-old steel worker.

He wanted her to divorce Schlett and marry him, she said, but she refused:

"I told him I had taken a vow in church and was going to stick with him (Schlett). He then said, 'If you don't do something about it, I will.'"

The 28-year-old mother of a 7-year-old daughter has been scheduled to follow Hastings to trial.

She said Schlett, a paper factory worker, 29, left their Sandusky (Ohio) home the night of January 26 and she saw him enter Hastings' car. Schlett was found dead 13 miles away next morning.

"What did you do to him?" she said she asked Hastings later, and he replied, "I didn't do anything," explaining he let Schlett out in downtown Sandusky.

Western High Students Make Movie Thriller

'Hi-Ho Silver' Is Take-Off on Ranger; Cost $150 to Produce

When the last lone villain's teeth had all but been stomped out and his hair satisfactorily ruffled, Bill McClure, Western High School senior who produced and was the financial angel for "Hi-Ho Silver," said at the premiere yesterday that he was a trifle dissatisfied.

But the select audience (which included the actors) gathered with knowing looks about the young producer and originator of the idea that a high school could, without aid, produce a movie. They knew that an artist never is satisfied. Besides, the picture was sophistication's very eye-tooth, which was the aim.

Soft Stuff, This Prologue

It was a two-reel take-off on the Western thriller. And there is sophistication out Western way. Indeed, they borrowed some silent film, showing such softies as Tom Mix rescuing a gal; the shooting up of an honest barroom and some quick gun pulling while a lady's life hinged on a trigger squeeze. Soft stuff, this prologue to the drama the Western students "shot" out on the extension of Massachusetts avenue.

There's was a Western thriller gone Eastern. It was the story of Horace Huckleberry and Gloria D——, who, having just married, sped off toward Niagara Falls, mooning at each other. But bandits overtook them to give Horace such a thrashing that he dissolved entirely from the picture.

There followed such sequences as brought the Ranger into the case. This tough fellow's lair was a penthouse. And there he sat, drat his whiskers, eating caviar, smoking cigarettes and with a ginful gleam in his eyes. But when the lady's father implored him into the case, the Ranger leaped into action, clad in a tough bathrobe; and what ensued when he overhauled the bandits on a road and later discovered the head bandit sitting beside his trussed-up victim, cheating in a game of solitaire, was . . . well, it would be unethical to tell all.

Feature Cost $150

This reviewer recommends the picture without reservation. The super-feature, costing exactly $150 and requiring five months in the making, proves that the East is tougher than the West and that men are men out Massachusetts avenue extension way. They'll fight for a lady—which also proves something fine in Western High School men. As a psychological study (and there should be some of this in every show) it proves that Western High School students are disillusioned. Which is a matter for the teachers.

The cast: The Ranger, Buddy Dugan; Horace Huckleberry, Gunnar Jadgmann; Gloria, Nancy Lee Tennyson; her father, Joe Viehmann; Burdett and McGarry, Allen Burdett and Edward McGarry; maid, Lucille Christmas; another maid, Mary Ella Hopkins; Mouse and Giant, Adrain Recinos and Stuart Brown; narrator, Curtis D. Cecil.

King's Suite In White House Kept Secret

First Lady Silenced By Secret Service On Royal Quarters

Restrictions imposed by Britain's Scotland Yard and the United States Secret Service yesterday kept Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt from talking about living quarters to be provided for King George and Queen Elizabeth during their June visit to the White House.

The First Lady cut short a review of plans for the royal couple which she previously announced she would disclose, when her secretaries reminded her of rules of "the Yard" and the Secret Service on the care of visiting dignitaries. She said she would have to learn what the two agencies considered dangerous to disclose before describing further plans for the reception.

Previously, she had disclosed that tentative plans called for housing the King in the northeast corner suite, consisting of a bedroom, dressing room and bath, while the Queen was to occupy a similar suite across the wide hall, a suite in which President Lincoln signed the emancipation proclamation.

Mrs. Roosevelt brushed aside newspaper column reports that Elliott Roosevelt and Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., her sons, were verging on divorces.

"I ceased long ago to worry about things that aren't true," she said at her press conference.

Approximately 10,000 out-of-towners call at the Executive Mansion each day, she went on. During Easter Week the number reached a peak of around 40,000 visitors a day, and the problem of housekeeping assumed such enormous proportions that the business of checking coats and cameras downstairs had to be omitted entirely.

Mrs. Roosevelt will leave with the President for New York tomorrow night. On Friday, they will be at Hyde Park to receive Crown Prince Olaf and Crown Princess Martha of Norway, who will be their guests until Sunday morning.

'Perfect Man' Sought, to Be Test Tube Mate

Housewife, 28, Says He Must Be Athletic, Preferably Blond

Chicago, April 25 (INS).—A "perfect specimen of manhood" was sought today by a pretty 28-year-old housewife to become the father of her "test tube" baby.

When the man is found, Mrs. Virginia Cleary, of suburban Harvey insisted, who meets the specifications drawn up by a noted psychiatrist, she will submit to artificial insemination.

The attractive brunette has filed suit for divorce from John R. Cleary, 42, whom she married when she was 16. They have two adopted children.

Dr. Orlando Scott, well known psychiatrist, who was consulted, listed the following specifications which must be met by the "perfect male:"

1. Between 28 and 32 years of age.
2. Athletic in type. Preferably light haired.
3. Unmarried, good habits, moderate in smoking and drinking.
4. Strong, well-formed features.
5. Strong personality, good ancestral background.
6. Weight between 160 and 175 pounds.

In addition, Dr. Scott said, the successful candidate must be able to pass the State medical examination and must submit to a thorough examination to determine there is no inheritable disease.

"I have high hope for the success of my plan," the attractive housewife said, "but if failure is the result I will be reconciled to the fact I can never become a mother."

Cleary, however, indicated he would not grant his permission, pointing out he is now paying $10 a week temporary alimony for support of their two adopted children.

Should her divorce be granted, her plan to become the mother of a eugenic baby might be thwarted, it also was indicated, as some Chicago physicians asserted laws and ethics would bar scientific impregnation of a woman unmarried or not living with her husband.

Czech, Albanian Envoys to Meet George VI Here

By the Associated Press.

Two envoys whose countries have lost their independence this year will be among diplomats invited to a special White House reception for King George and Queen Elizabeth of Great Britain.

The State Department, it was learned yesterday, will include Minister Vladimir Hurban of Czecho-Slovakia and Minister Faik Konitza of Albania on the guest list.

The prospective invitations were regarded in diplomatic circles as further indication of American refusal to recognize German and Italian sovereignty over the two nations.

The children and their mother are "doing fine." The triplets have been living in an incubator and have not yet been seen by their mother.

U. S. Indicts 90 In Sell-and-Switch

New York, April 25 (INS).—The biggest mass indictment on mail-fraud charges in the history of any Federal jurisdiction in the United States was handed up here today.

Ninety individuals and ten corporations were accused, the charges making a continuation of the drive of United States Attorney Cahill against alleged dishonest dealers in over-the-counter securities.

Cahill estimated that the defendants took in nearly $1,000,000 by the old sell-and-switch method of defrauding investors by at first offering them valuable securities and later inducing them to sell these or trade them in for comparatively worthless stock.

Roosevelt Receives Medicine Chest Taken From White House in 1814 by British Tar

Canadian Grandson Of War Raider Restores Antique

A small mahogany medicine chest that left the White House 125 years ago in the hands of a British sailor was given to President Roosevelt yesterday by the sailor's grandson.

The chest was in perfect condition. It is a brass-bound, 6-by-12-inch affair, with compartments for medicine bottles, pills and powders.

Archibald C. Kains, former Governor of the San Francisco Federal Reserve Bank, who at 73 has retired from active affairs, brought the chest back. A Canadian citizen residing in Ottawa, he was accompanied by Mrs. Kains and Michael Stillman, a brother-in-law.

Thomas Kains, purser of His Majesty's Ship Devastation, British man of war anchored in the Patuxent River when the British captured Washington in 1814, took the chest away. He carried it with him on subsequent travels. Assigned to the Victory, flagship of Lord Nelson, he carried the chest with him.

That probably accounts for the fact that, when restored to the White House today, one compartment contained a small quantity of hemlock bark—a medicine for scurvy.

Senate Praises First Merger Order Unifying Welfare, Works, Lending Agencies

Offices

Finance Corporation, Electric Home and Farm Authority, RFC Mortgage Co., Disaster Loan Corporation, Federal National Mortgage Association, Federal Home Loan Bank Board, Home Owners' Loan Corporation, Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, Federal Housing Administration and the Export-Import Bank.

Lending agencies concerned with agriculture, the Farm Credit Administration, the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation and the Commodity Credit Corporation and associated agencies, the President ordered transferred to the Agriculture Department.

$15,000,000 Saving Forecast

The President said his "No. 1 plan," would result in an ultimate annual saving of $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 a year, bring efficiencies practiced by "large private enterprises" and improve "the administrative management of the Republic."

Senate response was predominantly favorable. Democratic leaders were enthusiastic in their praise and no strong Republican opposition developed. Senate Minority Leader McNary said the order should receive "studious consideration" and, if economy claims were borne out, should be supported. Senator Taft (Republican), of Ohio, said he was "favorably impressed." Only Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, strongly condemned the plan "as making for the opposite of economy."

Taber to Force Vote

In the House, Representative Taber was swift to move to the attack with a charge that the plan is designed for "perpetuation" of so-called emergency set-ups. Representative Warren (Democrat), of North Carolina, House author of the reorganization bill, countered by asserting the plan extends the life of no agency and Congress retains the power to continue or drop activities when their statutory limits expire.

Later Taber announced he will introduce today the concurrent resolution needed to force a vote on the plan. This resolution will go to the Reorganization Committee and, if that group declines to act in ten days, a motion to discharge is in order. The resolution requires approval by both houses before reorganization can be checkmated. Under no circumstances can amendments be offered to the plan.

Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, who laid aside his own bill for integrated reorganization of the works and welfare agencies to support the President's program, predicted it will become law. He said he will proceed nonetheless with added legislative provisions of his own to implement the President's proposals.

The Byrnes follow-up legislation will provide a formula for distribution of relief funds to States, require that States and localities put up a third of the cost of works projects and ban all 100 per cent Federal relief projects. In addition, it may be amended to extend the lives of certain agencies.

Three to Draw $12,000

The President's plan created nine new offices at salaries ranging from $9,000 to $12,000 a year. At the head of the three agences he placed a Federal security administrator, a Federal works administrator and a Federal loan administrator, each with a $12,000 salary requiring Senate confirmation.

One assistant under each would receive a $9,000 salary. In addition, under the works agency, there would be a $10,000 a year commissioner of public works, a $10,000 a year commissioner of work projects and a $9,000 a year commissioner of public buildings.

Budget Bureau Transferred

Following up administrative management recommendations in his original reorganization message of two years ago, the President placed at the top of his plan an order for transfer of the Budget Bureau from the Treasury Department to the President's own Executive Office. To strengthen the bureau's research and investigational facilities, he also transferred to the bureau the Central Statistical Board. The central statistical committee he ordered abolished.

Also in line with earlier recommendations, he ordered transferred to his Executive Office the functions of the national resources committee and of the Federal employment stabilization office. These agencies would be abolished, and in their stead would be set up a national resources planning board. He asked Congress to give the board a permanent status.

Thus the President sought to attain two of his original reorganization objectives, White House management of budget and efficiency research and direction of "planning." A third objective, centralized management of personnel, was denied him when Congress exempted the Civil Service Commission from change.

But the President in yesterday's message served notice that he intends to designate one of the six administrative assistants already voted him to serve as a White House "liaison agent" on personnel management. He denied yesterday such assistants will serve as "assistant Presidents." Their task, he said, will be to help him obtain information and to condense and summarize it.

Personnel Transferred

In each reorganization subdivision, the President provided for transfer of records and property, funds and personnel of merged agencies, along with their functions. He stipulated that if employes transferred were in excess of needs, they should be re-transferred to other Government positions. If separation from the service becomes necessary, he pointed to a reorganization act provision given such employes one year's preference in the filling of Government vacancies.

As to who would fill the new high official posts created by the plan, the President told reporters at an afternoon press conference he had no idea and had given no thought to it. It has been assumed that Chairman Jesse Jones, of the RFC, would be offered the top job in the new Federal Loan agency.

While leaders made clear they intend to hold Congress for at least the 60 days required to give effect to the plan, the President told reporters it need not remain in session. Congress can adjourn if it wishes, he said, in which event he will resubmit the reorganization plan next January.

Reorganization plans "No. 2" and "No. 3," one dealing with shifts of bureaus within various departments, and the other concerned with interdepartmental shifts, are still to come, he said. The President leaves for Hyde Park today. He will return Tuesday and the following day may transmit one of these two plans, he is undecided which.

While Congressional critics, led by Representatives Taber and Dicksen (Republican), of Illinois, in the House, and Senator King in the Senate, complained that permanent status was being sought for temporary agencies, the President insisted his plan makes nothing permanent.

No department is permanent, and the State Department really is no more permanent than the CCC, the President argued. All, he said, are created by law, and depend on the approval of every Congress; Congress can abolish any of them or cut off any appropriation it wishes.

Fewer Jobs Predicted

Asked how the estimated $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 in economies would be effected, he said he did not wish to single out one or two agencies without taking time to go into the whole picture. But in the long run, he said, it will mean fewer jobs. Principal economies, he said, will be in material, rent and salaries, with rent a large factor.

As for Cabinet rank for heads of the three new agencies, he said that was forbidden by law.

In his message accompanying "Plan No. 1," the President coupled his plea for revamping with a defense of democracy against "ruthless attempts" to destroy it. He emphasized the need of keeping "the tools of American democracy up to date" and making certain "the people's government is in condition to carry out the people's will" promptly and effectively.

"We are not free if our administration is weak," he said. "But we are free if we know, and others know, that we are strong; that we can be tough as well as tender hearted; and that what the American people decide to do can and will be done, capably and effectively, with the best national equipment that modern organizing ability can supply in a country where management and organization is so well understood in private affairs."

Seems Likely to Pass

He listed efforts toward strengthening "the machinery of democracy" since 1883 enactment of the civil service law under President Arthur, declaring none of these efforts was "in any sense personal or partisan in design" and all were aimed at strengthening "the arms of democracy in peace and in war."

First to hail the plan were chairmen of Senate and House reorganization commitees. Senator Byrnes called it a "logical grouping" and said it carried out in general consolidation features of his own bill. Warren said the President had done "a magnificent job" that would win popular acclaim. He said "it will be a bold member who offers a resolution of disapproval."

Most Republicans were in agreement with Democrats that there is virtually no possibility of blocking the plan, but Representative Taber declared he intended to place House Democrats on record "for a bad job" by introducing a resolution today. Taber declared the plan "will saddle the Government permanently with $2,000,000,000 to $4,000,000,000 expenses by mixing temporary relief agencies in with the permanent." And he charged it would "bring down the efficiency of the regular agencies to the low level of the temporary set-ups."

Folk Festival Contestants Dance in Park

Folk

cago dancers in Franklin Park was nothing compared with the excitement caused among Washington Post employes by the Zuni Indians, who visited the building later in the day.

Bristling with bright-colored feathers, their faces decorated with paint, the redskins inspired considerable awe—until they relaxed and began grinning cheerfully. It turned out then that their regalia was that worn in the yellow corn dance, a peacemul harvest ceremonial, and the bows and arrows they carried were mere stage props.

Members of the Zuni tribe, the Indians have come to the festival under the sponsorship of the Office of Indian Affairs. They will appear at both matinee and evening performances tomorrow, Friday and Saturday.

Retain Age-Old System

Leader of the group is Henry Gasper, governor of the Zuni pueblo. Uncle Sam recognizes the unity and efficiency of the Zunis' government by allowing them to retain their age-old system of governor and council. Four councilmen are in the group which will be seen at the festival.

The six men and two girls (Lucy Epaloose, 15, and Ellen Quam, 17) who make up the party were heavily ornamented yesterday. In addition to ceremonial costumes and head dresses, they were laden down with silver bracelets, necklaces, bells and sea shells. Particularly envied by the paleface squaws were several heavy turquoise and silver necklaces worn by the girls. According to Indian office officials who accompanied them, each girl wore more than $1,000 worth of jewelry.

Other festival visitors at The Post building included Will Schroeder, his wife and their seven children, who come from the cow country near Kilgore, Nebr., and play cowboy ballads on instruments ranging from a washboard to a saxophone.

The Schroeders who are touring the country, appeared the other night at a Nebraska State Society dance. Senator Harry B. Coffee, of Nebraska, heard them play and suggested they call at the National Folk Festival office. They were promptly invited to appear in the festival.

Dance for Post Employes

Gingham-gowned girls and shirt-sleeved men staged an informal square dance for the entertainment of Post employes last night. They had just arrived from the Tennessee hills, led by Fred Colby, of Nashville. According to Colby, he and his group put on what probably was the first square dance ever held on a Norfolk & Washington Steamship Co. boat. The other passengers were startled at first but soon joined the fun. The Tennessee lads and lasses have invited their Washington friends to another dance at Pierce Hall this evening.

For choice seats at the National Folk Festival at Constitution Hall from Thursday through Saturday, get your tickets immediately at The Washington Post, 1337 E street northwest. The box office is open from 8 a. m. until midnight. Prices range from 50 cents to $1 for the three matinees; from 50 cents to $2 at the evening shows.

Lothian Favors Anti-Aggressor Grand Alliance

Next British Envoy to U. S. Wants 'Cash-Carry' Neutrality Policy

By the Associated Press.

London, April 25.—The Marquess of Lothian, newly-appointed British Ambassador to the United States, tonight called for "a grand alliance against aggression" and said he was confident that United States supplies would be made available to Europe's antiaggression nations in event of war.

The 57-year-old British diplomat, who will go to Washington this summer to suceed Sir Ronald Lindsay, discussed with American newspaper correspondents his conversion from an "appeaser" to a believer in a solid and militant front against the dictatorships.

He explained he was speaking personally and not expressing government views.

"I believe that in the event of hostilities the cash-and-carry principle is sure to make United States supplies available to the democracies," he said.

Has Toured 44 States

He sidestepped questions which might reveal whether he intends to devote his energies in Washington toward obtaining United States collaboration beyond such a cash-and-carry role.

He revealed that he intends to solve the problem of a British embassy hostess in Washington, arising from the fact that he is unmarried, by having his several sisters visit the United States at frequent intervals.

The marquess himself has visited the United States 14 times and has toured 44 States.

The newly-appointed Ambassador, who was secretary to Premier Lloyd George at the Paris peace conference and is credited with having drafted several clauses of the Versailles Treaty, said he "completely favored" a grand alliance centering upon the strength of Britain, France and Soviet Russia and open to all smaller states.

Lothian's Conversion

In describing his change of views, Lothian said:

"There was no possibility of permanent peace on the basis of denying Germany elementary rights like the right to arm and defend her frontiers, including the Rhineland, and the right of Austria to join the Reich.

"Now, however, I am convinced that the first condition for dealing with Hitler is the possession of superior power.

"The change in my outlook dates from the Chamberlain-Hitler conference at Godesberg last September when Germany's determination to wipe out Czecho-Slovakia's independence became clear. I drew the line when Germany claimed the right to extinguish individual and national liberty outside her own boundaries.

"Today, I completely favor a grand alliance. Simultaneously, I strongly indorse President Roosevelt's idea of meeting the crisis of the world in three stages, firstly, a pledge of no war and no aggression, then disarmament and finally to liberalize economic relations."

Cites Hitler's Book

London, April 25 (AP).—Lord Lothian, who in 1935 regarded Reichsfuehrer Hitler as "earnestly" desirous of peace, has decided that Hitler's book, "Mein Kampf," shows the German fuehrer's objective is to remake "a large part of the world by force."

British Hit King's Use of Cruiser

London, April 25 (AP).—Prime Minister Chamberlain, who conferred with King George at Buckingham Palace tonight, was believed to have discussed newspaper criticisms of use of the battle cruiser Repulse for the Royal visit to America at a time of international tension.

King George and Queen Elizabeth are scheduled to sail May 6.

The Evening Standard said in an editorial, the King and Queen should be asked to make the trip in a passenger liner, because "Britain has only three battle cruisers and two of these now are out of commission."

Million Face Draft in Britain; Taxes Soar for Defense Costs

British

he would not be able to do so until after Hitler answered the Roosevelt appeal in a speech to the Richstag Friday.

Chamberlain, however, was said to have decided it was imperative that Henderson be in Berlin when the conscription announcement is made, so that he could give the explanation as a fully accredited envoy of his government.

Opposition Foreseen

Opposition was foreseen from labor and other opposition to the government, but the Chamberlain majority would assure Parliamentary acceptance of the conscription measure.

About half the budget's defense expenditures are to be met by borrowing, but £24,000,000 (about $112,320,000) is to come from increased taxes on automobiles, tobacco, sugar, unexposed film, estates and higher surtaxes on incomes of more than £2,000 (about $9,360). A year's license for a small American-type car will cost about $175.

Another 5 per cent was added to the surtax on incomes of between £2,000 and £8,000 ($37,440) and a further 70 per cent on incomes of more than £8,000. (For example, the rate on the highest £2,000 of an £8,000 income rises from 47½ per cent to 52½ per cent.)

The budget is the largest Britain has ever had in peace time. Last year the total was £944,389,000.

50 Per Cent Estate Tax

On estates exceeding a £50,000 value a surcharge of 10 per cent of the existing duty was fixed. The rate is 15 per cent for an estate of £50,000 and rises to 50 per cent.

There was no change in the basic income tax of 27½ per cent, which starts with single persons earning above £125 or $585.

Despite the sugar tax increase of 1 farthing (half a cent a pound) and the tobacco tax of 11 shillings 6 pence ($2.67) which was an increase of 46 cents, the budget was regarded as "not too hard" on the "little man" but rather one hitting wealth the hardest.

It was understood Chamberlain had instructed Henderson, if possible, to tell Hitler and German Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop that:

The conscription is purely a defensive measure;

It is to be a part of the British obligations to her new allies—Poland, Rumania and Greece—and its aim is to assure peace through strength.

Britain has no intention to encircle Germany, but is determined to maintain the national independence of her allies.

Britain fully indorses President Roosevelt's appeal to Italy and Germany and urges them to cooperate in his plan for a 10 to 25 year peace agreement.

Conversations between Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax and Rumanian Foreign Minister Gafencu were concluded tonight.

Hitler Ridicules Army

London, April 25 (U.P.).—The cabinet agreed on military conscription after learning that Reichsfuehrer Hitler had ridiculed Britain's armed strength, it was reported tonight.

The cabinet's decision appeared to have been speeded up by a disclosure that Hitler, in conferring last week in Berlin with Rumanian Foreign Minister Gafencu, declared Britain unable to defend herself, much less Rumania.

Gafencu, now in London to learn how Britain proposes to back up her pledges of armed aid to Poland, Rumania and Greece in event of aggression, was stated to have repeated Hitler's remarks to Chamberlain.

Hitler's reported ridicule recalled the "contemptible little British army," to which German leaders referred in 1914. By the end of the World War the British Empire had mobilized 8,904,000 men, although there was no conscription until the war had been under way two years.

Concessions for Britain

Bucharest, April 25 (AP).—Report that Rumania would offer Great Britain concessions for establishing harbors for British shipping on the Danube and the Black Sea were heard today in informed quarters.

It was also stated that a British trade mission now here would be offered free zones in which British industrial enterprises might be conducted without tariff restrictions.

The Rumanians appeared willing to give the British any concessions accorded Germany in a trade pact signed March 23.

Belgrade "Neutral"

Belgrade, April 25 (AP).—Yugoslavia will make no new commitments to Germany, Foreign Minister Cinca-Markovich said today before departing for Berlin.

The foreign office explained the foreign minister "seeks information, not treaties" and that in his talks with the Germans he would ask for clarification of certain questions raised in conversations with Italian Foreign Minister Count Ciano, over the week-end.

Government spokesmen emphasized Yugoslavia's desire to remain as nearly neutral as possible. Political circles said they believed Yugoslavia had avoided definite commitments to Italy and Germany thus far.

Hitler Seeks Baltic Front

Berlin, April 25 (INS).—Reichsfuehrer Hitler tonight was believed making efforts to consolidate Germany's prestige in Finland and Lithuania, and Nazi circles envisioned a potential "Baltic Front" under German protection, should Russia and Britain become allies.

Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop received Finland's minister of culture and the commander in chief of the Finnish army. A Lithuanian economic delegation arrived here today.

Finland, which would be a strategic German base against Soviet Russia, was said to be restive over Anglo-Soviet antiaggression negotiations.

Ribbentrop Is 'Not In' to British Envoy

Conscription Threat Won't Alter Hitler's Speech, Press Says

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, April 25—The German press tonight declared that Britain's reported decision to initiate military conscription would make "no impression" on Reichsfuehrer Hitler's reply Friday to President Roosevelt's peace proposals.

Deutsche Allegemeine Zeitung said "it would be silly to believe that the German government could be surprised by it (conscription) or be dissuaded from its course by warnings or threats. That much should have been grasped of the policy of Adolf Hitler even over there."

The Hamburger Fremdenblatt, after reviewing British labor opposition to conscription in England, said "Chamberlain, however, must supply the propoganda weapons.

"That is the meaning of the so-called English threat of introducing conscription and of the entire diplomatic play around the declaration of the Fuehrer.

"Obviously such threats, owing to their internal political limitation, could make no impression in Berlin."

The Nazi government ignored predictions of British military conscription, and British Ambassador Sir Neville Henderson, who suddenly returned to Berlin yesterday in what was interpreted as a move to soften Hitler's words, failed to get an interview today with Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop.

Von Ribbentrop was "not in." A spokesman said the foreign minister was very busy these days, getting information for Hitler's address and preparing for forthcoming Yugoslav and Hungarian negotiations.

Factory workers, school children, store clerks, and others were instructed to listen to the radio from noon until 1:30 p. m. Friday (6 a. m. to 7:30 a. m. E.S.T.), when the Fuehrer talks.

Prime Minister Chamberlain told the House of Commons yesterday that Sir Nevile's return had "no special significance." Unless the envoy disavows Chamberlain's explanation, however, and tells the foreign office that he has a special mission, Von Ribbentrop might consider the return a routine matter. In that event, Hitler may not learn officially of the envoy's message, if he has one, before the Friday speech.

A Lithuanian delegation is here to put German-Lithuanian economic relations on a new basis following German acquisition of Memel. Foreign Minister Cinca-Markovich of Yugoslavia arrived today and began conferring immediately with Von Ribbentrop.

German hopes were high that Yugoslavia would poin the anti-Communist pact before Friday, leaving the announcement of such a step to Hitler when he talks to the Reichstag. (Germany, Italy, Japan, Spain, Hungary and Manchukuo have signed the agreement.)

Premier Count Teleky and Foreign Minister Csaky of Hungary are due here in time for the Reichstag session, and a Bulgarian delegation is expected here soon.

Canadian Deficit Set at $55,666,000

Ottawa, April 25 (Canadian Press).—Finance Minister Charles A. Dunning estimated in his annual budget message today that Canada would have an over-all deficit of $55,666,000 for the fiscal year 1938-1939, which ended March 31.

He estimated revenues of $501,677,000 — against expenditures of $557,343,000.

France Puts Rigid Control Over Press

Daladier Assails Attempts to Divide Public Opinion

By the Associated Press.

Paris, April 25.—Premier Daladier announced rigid press control laws today in what he described as the beginning of a battle to crush foreign propaganda inside France.

Foreign alliances and sweeping increases in armed forces are not enough, he told his cabinet. The press laws were signed by President Lebrun last Friday, but were published for the first time in the Official Journal today.

France, Daladier said, must be purged of all internal and foreign-inspired efforts to divide national opinion either by direct propaganda or by efforts to stir up racial or religious prejudice.

Offenders are liable to as much as five years in prison, heavy fines and even loss of civil rights.

Right, Left Accused

The decree declared "it cannot be permitted for foreign agents in all liberty to retain in France itself the means of influencing opinion by campaigns appropriate to their ends."

Leftist newspapers have accused Rightist newspapers of being financed by German and Italian sources, and Rightists have charged that the Leftist press was subsidized by Soviet Russia.

Daladier talked to the French ambassador, Robert Coulondre, before the latter returned to Berlin.

Titulescu Arrives

Grigore Gafencu, the Rumanian foreign minister, is due in Paris Wednesday.

Nicolas Titulescu, former Rumanian premier and foreign minister, who is experienced in relations with France and Britain, arrived last night.

The foreign office experts are concentrating on negotiations with Turkey in the hope Foreign Minister Bonnet can tell Gafencu that the "Dardanelles will be open" to French and British warships in time of war.

The fate of Syrian Alexandretta, now called the Hatay Republic and under joint administration of French and Turkish troops, may be settled within the next two days. Turkey wants full sovereignty there.

Hull Warns World Won't Abide Bullying

All Controversy Can Be Settled Peaceably, He Tells Red Cross

Cross

others, but none, he insisted, could be self-suffering except at the cost of a dissatisfied populace. He continued:

"No nation is excluded from participation in the benefits of these precious means of betterment and advancement of mankind, except as it deliberately excludes itself—either by short-sighted attempts at national isloation or the even more short-sighted policy of armed aggrandizement.

Isolation Dooms a People

"Isolation dooms a people to inescapable improverishment; armed aggrandizement, under modern conditions of warfare, entails destruction for which no conceivable advantages secured by the conqueror can possibly provide compensation.

"A nation, entering upon either of these ruinous courses, inflicts an incalculable injury upon its own people and upon the world as a whole."

Secretary Hull said he would not believe that any nation has irrevocably entered upon the road to war. This country, he added, is prepared to make its contribution toward peace.

"But if our hopes are doomed to disappointment," he said, "if, after all, the red flames of war rather than the noonday sun of peace are to illumine our horizon, we are equally prepared to defend successfully our national interests and our cherished institutions."

Vital to Nation's Defense

And so long as war was a possibility, he said, the American Red Cross was a vital adjunct to our national defense and, as such, must be made fully effective for its great service of mercy.

Miss Mabel T. Boardman, secretary of the American Red Cross, also spoke at the banquet, discussing the past, present and future of the organization. She warned the Red Cross leaders not to stray from the original aims—voluntary aid to the sick and wounded in war and in great disasters.

Norman H. Davis, chairman of the American Red Crass, was toastmaster. The Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., regent of the Schol of Foreign Service, Georgetown University, pronounced the invocation.

The President talking to 3,500 delegates gathered before the south portico of the White House. After praising the work of the Red Cross over 58 years, and emphasizing its increased efficiency in recent years, the President said:

Spirit Does Not Wane

"The spirit of the Red Cross does not wane. In a world disturbed by war and fear of war the unselfish devotion of the Red Cross to the welfare of others stands out in striking contrast to inhuman acts which have shocked our conscience."

Earlier in the day, Surgeon General Thomas Parran of the United States Public Health Service called on the Red Cross to take the lead in fighting for a healthier Nation.

"We don't see people die around us from ordinary causes," he said. "And so we do not get alarmed at the death rates from pneumonia or cancer. If the number of persons who die from these diseases should be killed by a disaster, the Red Cross would have no trouble raising money overnight for necessary relief of their families. But you have a job to do. Go out and get the public excited about the number of persons who are actually dying from preventable diseases.

"The blot on our national fitness because of preventable disease is a sad thing. Even less cheering is the evidence of malnutrition in a land of plenty. Step by step, as the income level goes down, among millions of children and youth you will find stunted growth, imperfections in development, lack of mental alertness."

Praised for Work In South

Praising the Red Cross for what it has done in fighting pellagra in the South, malnutrition in the dust-bowl areas, and for the public health work carried out by Red Cross nurses, Dr. Parran said the organization was the greatest potential instrument for arousing volunteer effort to improve the Nation's health.

Dr. Frank G. Boudreau, executive director of the Milbank memorial fund of New York, warned the delegates that any restriction of liberty stifles the spirit of free initiative in health matters.

"I have seen what happens to private agencies as the result of a long war," he said, "for to win such a war many of the priyileges and rights men have won through the centuries must be cast overboard as so much excess baggage.

"In a number of European countries private health agencies which were sturdily independent before the war, came to depend on government subsidies as private sources dried up.

"Something of their true character was lost by this change, for the use of public moneys inevitably implies some measure of public control. Here in America, as elsewhere in the democratic world, the field of Government is steadily enlarging, and this is taken as a sign that the field of private agencies is steadily decreasing or being encroached upon. These changes need cause no alarm, for the slow growth of Government is inevitable in such a complicated society as ours.

Surest Road to Ruin

"Moreover, it is the business of private agencies to explore new ground, develop new methods, overcome suspicion and prejudice by education, so that when Government takes over it may be expected to do a reasonably adequate job. The defeatism which causes private agencies to look for Government subsidies because of declining revenues from voluntary contributions is the surest road to ruin."

Miss Mary Beard, recently appointed director of the American Red Cross nursing service, said voluntary health agencies are more needed now than ever before.

"There is hardly a community in the country where there are enough public health nurses to make a complete community health program," she said.

Text of Welcome to Red Cross

By the Associated Press.

Chairman Davis, senior and junior delegates to the Red Cross convention:

It gives me great pleasure to greet here at the White House this national Red Cross assemblage and to give assurance that no enterprise is nearer to my heart than the work carried on in behalf of all humanity by this superb organization.

As you know, I have had the honor of being the president of the Red Cross since 1933—but my interest in the work dates back to my active participation in the Red Cross in the trying days of the World War.

Support From All People

Although ours is a semi-Governmental agency, it draws support from the people as a whole. Designated by Congress as the official, volunteer humanitarian organization of the Nation, with specific powers and responsibilities, the Red Cross operates with independence and impartiality. It is universal in its appeal to our citizens because everyone is welcome in its membership; and it is impartial in conferring its benefits.

When there is disaster every agency of the United States Government is directed to co-operate with the Red Cross. Government resources and man power lay an important part in aiding and restoring physical damage in communities struck by calamities. But they can never replace the humanitarian handling of the problems of the individual, which is the work of the Red Cross.

I am especially proud of the improvement that has come during the past few years under our late chairman, Admiral Grayson, and our new chairman, Mr. Norman Davis. I refer particularly to the co-ordination and co-operation which has been worked out in times of disaster between the many agencies of the United States Government and the American Red Cross, today.

High State of Efficiency

In floods, in fires and in hurricanes the system of pooling our resources has been brought to a very high state of efficiency.

In time or local or regional disaster, all human agencies—those of the Federal Government or State governments and of county and municipal governments know exactly what to do. They are organized for instantaneous action. And, as you know, that action proceeds smoothing and without duplication of effort under the general direction of the American Red Cross itself.

Furthermore, after the emergency of human suffering is cared for other Government agencies step in with the system of the Red Cross to carry on the work of rehabilitation—physical work and financial aid.

I hope the people of the Nation realize the splendid efficiency of these joint efforts. There is no lost motion, there is no waste of emergency or relief funds—and I believe that no country in the world has reached the standards which the United States has achieved in this respect in the past few years.

The strength of our splendid organization is in its appeal to the tenderest sympathies of all our people. It embraces in its membership all races and creeds and knows no politics. There is nothing narrow or sectional about it. All of our people find unity in one great objective; the relief of human suffering.

Appeals to Young and Old

Happily, too, the Red Cross appeals both to adults and to our young people. Through the Junior Red Cross, 9,000,000 boys and girls are being brought up in the tradition of service to others. The foundation being laid for these boys and girls in the Junior Red Cross, which has for its motto "I serve," may well be an important factor in the future welfare of our Nation.

In its 58 years' existence the American Red Cross has also been exceptionally generous and active in extending a helping hand to our distressed neighbors. Within the past 12 months not only have our resources of money and our resources of volunteer help been strained to the utmost in meeting disaster relief needs, such as in the New England hurricane where great loss of life and property was suffered—but in generous contributions to distressed civilians in China, in Spain, in aiding the refugees in France, and in Chile where earthquakes took an appalling toll of life and left thousands of injured to be cared for.

Spirit Does Not Wane

The spirit of the Red Cross does not wane. In a world disturbed by war and fear of war the unselfish devotion of the Red Cross to the welfare of others stands out in striking contrast to inhumane acts which have shocked our conscience.

The task before us is enormous. Our work, by reason of its very nature, never is done. Our work never can be done while human misery exists.

The work must go bravely on.

We shall not fail because we know all America is with us.

is no adequate literature available for reference and no possibility of discussion."

Other awards were the Daniel Giraud Medal for 1934 to Theophilus Shickel Painter, of the University of Texas, for work in the field of genetics, and the same medal for 1933 to Richard Swann Lull, of the Peabody Museum at Yale University, for research on dinosaurs.

Nobel Winner Honored

The John J. Carty Medal was given to Sir William Bragg, of the Royal Institution, London, for X-ray crystal analyses, work which already has won him the Nobel Prize.

Earlier in the day "an untried method of forecasting weather which seems competent to predict weather changes for two weeks in advance" was described by Dr. C. G. Abbot, Smithsonian Institution secretary.

The system depends, he said, on accurately determining daily changes in the sun's radiation which he believes to be the "main cause of weather changes."

Dr. Abbot urged that seven stations for solar radiation observation be added to three now in existence. At an annual cost of only $200,000, the variations "could be accurately enough determined every day in the year to serve as a basis for predicting weather changes two weeks in advance the world over.

Dr. Abbot said 12 years of observations in the months of January and April revealed there were variations in solar radiation averaging seven-tenths of 1 per cent. Temperatures in Washington after an increase or decrease of several days' duration in solar radiations showed a marked correlation for about 16 days. There was no such correlation before the changes, he noted.

Dr. Abbot indicated that knowing the normal temperatures of a given area and a given season, the variations could be calculated on the basis of the solar changes.

Two scientists of Memorial Hospital, New York, Drs. G. Failla and K. Sugiura, told of a new method of attacking cancer by "drowning" diseased cells. They declared they produced from twice to 15 times as much regression in mouse sarcoma—tumors of a malignant sort—by injecting distilled water into the tumors after treatments with X-rays.

They believe X-rays cause chemical changes in the cells making them weaker and permitting them to absorb larger quantities of the fluid. The resultant swelling of the tumors and other changes are thought injurious to the malignant cells, and a large enough dose kills them.

A new method of killing pain in one of the most painful and stubborn of human diseases—neuralgia of the face—was reported yesterday by Drs. H. Borsook, M. Y. Kremers and C. G. Wiggins, of the California Institute of Technology.

They said the treatment, which consists of injection of vitamin B-1, the antineuritis factor in food, had relieved pain in a majority of 52 persons treated, some of whom had suffered from neuralgia for 20 years.

Previous surgical and medicinal treatments have had indifferent success. Injections of vitamin B—lack of which causes beri-beri and other nerve degeneration diseases—coupled with injection of liver extract produced marked improvement, Dr. Borsook said. He believes there may be a connection between neuralgia and anemia.

News of Capital Night Clubs

By Mary Harris.

DRUMMER TO MAESTRO: It's a "hail and farewell" party for Johnny Morris, drummer with Vincent Lopez' orchestra, at the Rainbow Room tonight. Johnny will receive a gold drum tonight as the "drummer of the month" chosen in a national contest. This week at the Earle Theater is Johnny's last with Vincent Lopez. He will immediately start to organize his own band. Next time you hear of him, his name will probably be up in lights. Johnny leaves the Lopez group with the good wishes of the maestro and the boys. They'll all be at the Rainbow Room tonight and we'll wager that Vincent will top off the party with some of his own rippling piano melody, that Johnny will tear off some hot rhythm on Lew Berman's drums.

A sub-party at Rainbow will be the get-together of Violinist Durward Bowersox and the Lopez gang. Durward played with Lopez for four straight seasons, winding up with Vincent's engagement with Earl Carroll's Vanities.

SIGNS OF SUMMER: Most of the diversion spots are already using a touch of air-conditioning, just enough to be refreshing when you come out of the noon or afternoon sun.

They're painting the chairs on the Shoreham Terrace—and in gypsy colors to match the girls' new gypsy evening gowns.

FACES AND PLACES: In the Shoreham Blue Room: The Japanese Ambassador, Dr. Kensuke Horinouchi . . . Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose (the biscuit queen) very stately in gray crepe. In the Mayflower Lounge: Eleanor Meem dancing to "My Heart Belongs to Daddy" played in rumba rhythm with Dick Koons handling the maracas . . . Mrs. Joseph E. Casey, pretty wife of Representative Casey, enjoying the cocktail hour with Mrs. Robert Whitney Imbrie. In the Shar-Zad: Mr. and Mrs. Julian K. Holman (she's the daughter of Representative Henry Bascom Steagal, of Alabama, one of the real powers in the House), renewing old friendship with Maestro Don Taylor. They all went to grammar school together in Ozark, Ala. At the Pirate's Den: At different times—all of the White House secretariat—Marvin McIntyre, "Missy" Marguerite LeHand and Stephen Early. At Troika: Gov. Marriner Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board and Mrs. Eccles . . . President Giannini of the Bank of America.

ROLLING WALTZ: Anchor Room's Mat Windsor has decided on a name for his new dance composition. It's "Waltzing Makes Love Roll." And it has both roll and umph, plenty!

SPORTS PARADE: Pretty models in slacks, shorts and other sport get-ups will saunter across the bar at the Hour Glass this afternoon. More of Helen Greene's witty and informative announcing. And please notice the costume accessories. Helen's a whizz at picking the right gadgets to go with frocks.

DANCE OF DEATH: Every midnight at Bamboo Gardens this week there'll be a "Death Dance" by Reynard and Marcia. It's a precious little carnival of murder and sadism, with Marcia appearing with candles a la Lady Macbeth and Reynard done up like Karloff. Strong men shudder and women faint. It's only being done at the late show out of regard for the nerves of patrons at the luncheon and dinner revues. You'll love it when Reynard chokes Marcia.

BLUE ROOM DECEMBER: With snow men standing by the bandstand, with both skating and dancing on ice in order in Shoreham's Blue Room, one expects snow flakes to come drifting down on the "Ice Show" at any minute. Amazing, really, is Star Skater Evelyn Crandler, especially in her "Arabian cartwheel" and "Axel Paulsen."

GLEN ECHO'S ROVERS: Postmen go for hikes on their days off. Musicians, just as soon as they finish playing, head for other and later night spots. So who should we find in Shar-Zad at an unearthly hour but Glen Echo's "king of swing," Herbie Holmes, and his star singer, Nancy Hutson, foregathering with the Biltmore Boys. Herbie told us about his new "Levee Loungers" quartet, recommended their yodeling of "Three Little Fishes." We left him enjoying his favorite dish, oysters Rockefeller.

FUNNY WALLY: Top new comic spot in the Lotus' Broadway Revue is Wally Rand's act. This nervy lad sings, dances and juggles—all with a rapid fire of running patter that incites the customers to put in some repartee of their own. You may like his imitation of Jimmy Savo best. New at Lotus, too, are Beryl and Martinez in sleek Latin-American dances.

FACTS, NO FOOLING: A customer presented Cafe Caprice's "Tiny" Meeker with a list of 30 requests the other evening. The Meeker Trio played every one of them.

Angie Rodante (Hi Hat lark) is doing unlimited quantities of sightseeing this week. Because her mother has come from Tampa to visit her. "I'd never have gotten to the Capitol if mother hadn't come to town," says Angie.

George Berg (Brown Derby) is the city's champion long-distance piano player. He can play for six hours at a stretch in top form and without letting up on that snappy left-hand melodizing that's his specialty.

MELODY WITH UMPH-H! Grand old "Dinah" played as a rumba by Paul Kain and his Metronome Room orchestra. Paul transforms "Dinah" into a Bahama mamma.

The "Jungle Crawl" as Mario di Polo and has boys play it for the fancy dancing of Enters and Borgis at the Pall Mall Room.

Mayfair's Leo and Louanna harmonizing "Terrib' Attractive" from "Stars In Your Eyes." Cute as a cut-glass button.

Jimmy Nichols (Lounge Riviera) giving the works to "Let's Stop the Clock." It's his top request except for "My Heart Belongs to you-know-who."

The contrasting styles in which Washington's two Buddies (Buddy Parsons of the Uptown cocktail lounge and Buddy Shaner of the Lotus) sing "Ol' Man River." Buddy of the Lotus sings it straight and sweet. Buddy of the Uptown injects all sorts of wicked swing tricks.

This isn't a collection of two-headed girls. It's just a puzzling pose of Lenora's Dancing Dolls, now at Bamboo Gardens

3 Groups Fight Yellow Fever's Entry in U. S.

A concerted attack against the danger of yellow fever, which can be introduced to the United States by airplanes from South America, was announced yesterday by Dr. Felix J. Underwood, chairman of the United States Public Health Service yellow fever committee.

Dr. Underwood told the annual conference of State and Territorial health officers that a survey of South American airports is being made. The Rockefeller Foundation has kept an emergency supply of 12,000 doses of yellow fever vaccine, the National Institute of Health is planning to manufacture more vaccine, and the Public Health Service has set up a mobile unit.

Dr. K. E. Miller, medical adviser of the Federal Trade Commission, also spoke yesterday morning, after which a business session concluded the convention.

Omaha Reverts To '69 to Mark First Railroad

Omaha, April 25 (INS).—Omaha tonight turned back the clock to the days of '69 for "Golden Spike Week" to commemorate completion of the first transcontinental railroad.

Traffic policemen wear beards such as were popular in grandpa's day, night club cigarette girls look like Jenny Linds and two-gun Gerties. Even the colored porter at the hotel is dressed up—a dusky Dan'l Boone and the Union Pacific depot has been transformed into a frontier fort.

The original golden spike, driven into a railroad tie to mark completion of Union Pacific's transcontinental line, is en route from Stanford University, where it long has reposed in a velvet case in a vault.

Roosevelt Plea Puts World on Feet, Eden Says

Restoration of Faith In Goodwill, a Peace Front Urged by Briton

By Anthony Eden,

Former British Secretary of Foreign Affairs. By Wireless and Special Wire to The Post.

London, April 25.—It has been said of President Roosevelt's message that it has gained for the world a lull, but in truth it has already done much more than that. It has brought the world back to fundamentals. By the remarkable frankness and candor of its language the nations are summoned to hope and think before it is too late. Having described recent tendencies in world politics and the death of the independence of "three nations in Europe and one in Africa," the President draws the inevitable conclusion: "To speak clearly, the moment is approaching when this situation must end in a catastrophe unless a more rational method of managing events is found."

Here then is the issue, and there could be none more fundamental for the future of mankind. Whatever the immediate answer of the governments of Berlin and Rome—and no one would expect them to be glowing favorable—it is in any event so much gained that the alternative has been plainly put before them by the head of the most powerful state in the world. No amount of denunciation by a government-controlled press can entirely conceal that fact from the German and Italian people.

Explanations Forced

By his action President Roosevelt has gained the initiative and it has become necessary for those who are not prepared to accept his proposal to explain their attitude, which explanation will need to be addressed at least as much to their own people as to the outside world.

All sections of the British people were glad to note their government's immediate welcome to President Roosevelt's proposals. The moment therefore is now appropriate for Great Britain to consider her policy and determine what her own contribution must be to assure that the "more rational method," upon which the maintenance of peace depends, is in fact found and followed.

The first step toward any restoration of confidence in Europe is the creation of a peace front and its organization in resisting any further acts of aggression.

It is upon this immensely formidable task that the British government is now engaged with the support of a united nation.

Restoration of Confidence

The final objective must always be to restore confidence in international good faith and to substitute some form of international order for the present tendency toward international anarchy.

The nations are everywhere on a war footing, and confidence in international engagements has not for many decades sunk so low. Such has been the inevitable effect of recent acts of aggression callously perpetrated before the world. It has driven Great Britain to undertake commitments of the most far-reaching character in eastern Europe and to assume the leadership in organizing resistance to further acts of aggression.

That leadership cannot be allowed to fail. And we can note already that the task is being undertaken with the sympathy and active support of peace-loving nations everywhere. Alongside this endeavor, President Roosevelt's initiative is parallel action of the utmost value.

Example of Co-operation

There could be no better example of what can be achieved by a tolerant and farsighted management of affairs than in the marked improvement which has taken place in Greco-Turkish relations since the close of the disastrous war between those two countries. Indeed, throughout the period of its principal authority the League of Nations was always able to call upon the ready co-operation of the representatives of the Balkan countries which were among the first to recognize the vital significance to their own safety of the maintenance of a strong, international order.

It is, therefore, all the more disturbing to note that once again the activity of certain great powers has become a disruptive element in the Balkans.

It so happens that British national interests and those of the Balkan countries correspond in every respect. It is a chief objective of British foreign policy in the Near East to see the states of the Balkan peninsula strong, united and at peace. It must therefore be the concern of British diplomacy to counter any action calculated to weaken them or to sow dissension amongst them.

Daddy of the 'Trailerites' Here Before 'Hitting New York'

MR. AND MRS. FRED V. DANKOWSKE

Dankowske, 75, Still Thrills to the Open Road, After 42 Years Covering 300,000 Miles of It In Covered Wagon, Housecar and Automobile

There was a "heigh-ho for the open road" in the eyes of Fred V. Dankowske, "the daddy of the trailerites," as he roared into Washington yesterday.

With him in the old gas wagon was Mrs. Dankowske, "a mild woman whom I lured into a trailer honeymoon 42 years ago," said Dankowske, shaking off the figurative dust of 300,000 miles.

"I'm as hard as a nail and I'm in my 75th year," said the trailerites' daddy. "I can climb a mountain where men half my age can't go. Not long ago, I climbed a glacier 300 feet deep in an elevation of 11,242 feet. Ever try it?"

Nobody had. "The outdoors is mighty great," said Dankowske, by way of recommendation. "I've lived in it for 52 consecutive years; if I live 75 more years I'll still be trailering."

"I swung not long ago up through British Columbia way and across the Canadian Rockies. Boy!"

But the eyes, reminiscent, flared into enthusiasm: "In this modern nomadic age, every trailer I see rolling along the highway automatically gives me a thrill of joy . . . It not only means health, youth, vigor and joy, but it prolongs life's beautiful journey. It not only gives us a first-hand introduction to this marvelous, nourishing and magnificent bosom of precious old mother earth, but it offers us a visual and impressive course in American history. . . .

"I started out in a covered wagon more than half a century ago, after leaving my Chicago home, and I turned to gasoline in 1912. Yes, in the spring of 1912, I junked my antiquated pony express and the International Harvester Co., of Chicago, built my first motorized housecar—a two-cylinder, high-wheeler, shod with solid rubber tires.

"On a number of occasions we were stuck in bogs and holes all night in remote districts, and . . . traveling in dry and fair weather, we were often enveloped in clouds of dust . . . in wet and stormy weather we ploughed through miles and miles of muddy roads . . . and now? I'll stay around here a couple of weeks and then hit New York for the fair."

D. C. Contractor Loses Appeal On Privilege Tax

The District Board of Tax Appeals yesterday held contractors could not deduct the price of building materials in computing gross receipts for payment of the business privilege tax unless the company supplying the materials actually took part in the actual construction.

Jo V. Morgan, member sole of the appeals body, held the Columbia Foundation Co., of Washington, was not entitled to a refund of $405, representing the 1937 tax, but had to pay the District an additional $88, based on a building operation in 1936, although payment was not received by the company until a year later.

Buried 'Streams' Delay Memorial

Engineers have encountered subterranean water 80 to 90 feet below the surface and construction of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial's superstructure at the Tidal Basin is expected to be delayed a month.

It will be necessary to seal each caisson footing before concrete is poured, it was learned yesterday. F. F. Gillen, National Park Service engineer, said underground "streams" had been figured as a possibility even before ground was broken.

Mrs. Fannie Speyer, Refugee, Dies

Mrs. Fanny Speyer, mother of Dr. Siegfried Speyer, Washington physician, died in Johannesburg, April 22, according to word received here yesterday. A refugee from Germany, Mrs. Speyer had left that country five weeks earlier with her daughter to join her two sons in South Africa. Nearly 80 years old and weakened by the long journey, she was stricken by a heart attack and died 12 days after her arrival. Dr. Speyer, also a refugee from Germany, has been in Washington two and a half years, but was permitted to practice medicine only six months ago.

Peace And Security

In his notable address to the Red Cross convention last night, Secretary Hull spoke feelingly of the toll exacted by war and warlike preparations. War, he said, "casts a shadow before and leaves a pall behind."

Nor is it aggressive nations alone that are caught in the net. Satisfied states, fearful of their security and determined to preserve their independence, find it necessary to prepare themselves for war, preferring, as Mr. Hull points out, "armed defense to subjection and slavery."

Defense against attack, however, cannot be limited to rearmament measures alone. A nation's army, navy and air force are and must perforce remain its last, not its first, line of defense. They come into play only when all other means of preventing war have failed.

It is this fact which gives point and significance to the action of the American Union for Concerted Peace Efforts in dedicating the seven days between April 26 and May 3 as "Peace and Security Week."

Peace is not and cannot be a static concept. Security rests on far more than military strength, latent or organized. A nation as powerful as the United States has other means than war with which to confront aggression. It can, for instance, make it unmistakably clear that its resources will not be placed at the disposal of those who take to the war path. We can throw the weight of our unexampled economic resources on the side of the nations seeking the abolition of war as an instrument of national policy.

Hitherto the American position has been somewhat equivocal. While the sentiments of the American people are overwhelmingly hostile to unprovoked aggression, we have by our neutrality policy rendered aggressive nations aid and comfort. It is a dangerous anomaly which must be resolved if the United States is to play a constructive part in the enormously important effort being made to prevent war.

In helping to educate the public to the realities of the international situation, and our own responsible part therein, "Peace and Security Week" can prove of very real value at this time.

Politics On The Bench

Two sources of weakness in the Federal judiciary were brought forcefully to public attention in the address of Attorney General Murphy at the annual meeting of the Associated Press in New York. As a group, the courts have failed to achieve efficiency in their work. In isolated cases, politics have been allowed to intrude upon the judicial function.

There was no effort on the part of Mr. Murphy to discredit the judiciary as a whole. On the contrary, he declared his faith in the integrity of the courts and pointed to the vital role they play in the preservation of democracy. But general confidence in the system should not and does not blind the Attorney General to its specfic weaknesses. It is undoubtedly true that the country has been shocked by recent evidence of corruption on the bench. And there is general dissatisfaction over the delay and injustice resulting in part from inefficiency in the courts.

For this lack of good management the courts themselves are largely to blame. It is true that legislation is essential to provide an administrative system for the judiciary. But such legislation might have been passed years ago, if the courts had been sufficiently insistent. Fortunately, the House Judiciary Committee has now approved a bill giving the courts control over their budgets and setting up a business manager to function under the judicial conference. This should give the courts full responsibility for administration of their own affairs in an efficient manner. It might even result in a curtailment of judicial vacations in courts that are far behind with their work, as well as in the adoption of more business-like procedure.

Responsibility for the other weakness referred to by the Attorney General falls upon the Department of Justice, the President and the Senate. The courts cannot be kept free from politics so long as judgeships are granted as rewards for political service. No doubt Mr. Murphy's political discretion prompted him to refer to unsatisfactory appointments of the Harding-Coolidge era. But it would have been more to the point if he had cited the cases in which judgeships have been awarded to unsuitable candidates for their services in the political campaigns of 1938.

The very fact that Mr. Murphy is making a drive for better judicial appointments suggests that he is disturbed by some abuses of the appointing power in this field during the recent past. His frank statement that integrity in the courts "hinges, in a very large degree, on the character of judicial appointments" should help to elevate the standards applied to prospective judges by both the White House and the Senate. For, as the Attorney General says, "never before in history has it been so important that we insist upon the selection of men of proved ability and spotless integrity, men of learning and high intellectual stature."

A Revolutionary Change

On October 4, 1938, Premier Chamberlain promised the House of Commons that "conscription or compulsory national service will not be introduced by this government in peacetime."

In speaking thus the British Prime Minister was not only voicing his own view and that of his government. He was depicting as well the attitude and temper of the British people. State compulsion, carried to that extreme, is profoundly distasteful to the Anglo-Saxon temperament.

That is why the British government, in 1914, was so loath to adopt even as a temporary wartime expedient the system of enforced recruiting which continental nations had long before come to regard as a matter of course. Indeed, it was not until 17 months after the outbreak of the world conflict that Great Britain replaced voluntary enlistment by conscription. And the moment the war was over, conscription was stopped.

But times have changed and the changes have come with particular force and rapidity in the six months since Mr. Chamberlain gave the assurances quoted above. The policy of appeasement has failed. To meet the threat arising out of the possibility of further German and Italian aggressions, Great Britain has made far-reaching commitments to nations in the path of the axis. No longer can the British feel at all certain that through the exercise of sea power they are enabled to rely on a small professional army.

Stark military considerations have inevitably led the Chamberlain government to reconsider the problem of conscription. The arguments against it have lost no whit of their force since last October. The traditional dislike of compulsory service remains as strong as ever in Great Britain. But a combination of political realities and diplomatic commitments is driving the London government to an about-face on this fundamental issue.

The dominant argument today is that to save peace the totalitarian powers must be convinced the United Kingdom is prepared to use every instrumentality of warfare at its command. By adopting conscription, the British government would be issuing a warning of unmistakable force to the aggressive nations. And should it come to war, despite all the efforts made by Great Britain to prevent the disaster, it is obviously essential, so advocates of conscription argue, that she be prepared to exert her maximum strength from the very outset.

It gets down to this: As long as Great Britain was isolated from the continent she could depend on sea power alone to defend her territory and her empire. But circumstances have destroyed this isolation. The Channel is no longer a barrier. Great Britain is today in every real sense of the term a continental power, forced to think and act in continental terms.

That explains the recent revolution in her diplomacy. It explains also why, for the first time in their history, the British people are now seriously planning to adopt conscription as a basic policy of preparedness.

Leiserson's Appointment

Dr. William M. Leiserson, chairman of the National Mediation Board, has been named by the President to succeed Donald Wakefield Smith as a member of the National Labor Relations Board. Dr. Leiserson's long experience as a labor mediator, and his practical as well as his theoretical knowledge of industrial problems, have been ideal training for this responsible position.

The one serious objection to Dr. Leiserson is that he has been a rather too ardent champion of the Wagner act in its present imperfect form. This was demonstrated when, something over a year ago, he registered a strong protest against an editorial in The Post which stated that "the employer is not accorded equal protection against unfair employe practices, nor is he granted any right of appeal to the board." As the editorial went on to say: "the very conditions under which the NLRB was created, and the duties assigned to it under the law, make it a protector of labor, rather than an impartial mediator between employers and employes."

In reply Dr. Leiserson emphasized that the law was not designed as a mediation act. He then utilized the device of the rhetorical question to show that employers already have the right to organize, and therefore do not need the protection which in that respect the Wagner act extends to labor. His argument was clever casuistry, but very significantly Dr. Leiserson failed to refer to the particular kinds of unfair employe practices, such as the local Zirkin case, which critics are able to cite with telling effect.

In his letter printed in The Post of February 8, 1938, Dr. Leiserson further asserted that "so far as appealing to the board is concerned employers get this result by simply refusing to deal with any representatives of the employes until the board certifies that they are the legally authorized representatives."

Unfortunately, employers who have been the hapless victims of jurisdictional disputes, in which both sides to a labor dispute are playing for time, have little reason to share this optimistic view. And one may guess that the board itself is none too confident on the issue. For it has admitted that study might profitably be given to the "feasibility" of granting employers the right of direct petition under safeguards.

So long as the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. remain deadly enemies it is perhaps as well that the Wagner act be left untouched, except for minor amendments to which there is general agreement. Hence, for the time being, Dr. Leiserson's views in respect to corrective legislation are not important. The current objective should be to achieve the best results, under unpropitious conditions, by efficient administration. There is good reason to believe that the new appointee will prove an effective administrator. But there would be more confidence in the impartiality of his judgment if his past attitude to the underlying law had been more objective.

First Reactions

Time and study will be required to enable even an expert to pass judgment upon the comprehensive reorganization order just transmitted to Congress by the President. It is, however, immediately apparent that the proposed grouping of hitherto independent agencies and subordinate governmental units follows a logical functional pattern.

That is a strong point in favor of the new plan, but it by no means constitutes assurance that greater economy and efficiency will result. Indeed, the President promises only limited administrative savings as a result of the suggested changes. Furthermore, some of these economies, he says, will only be brought about after "painstaking and gradual readjustment in the machinery and business practices of the Government."

One of the strongest arguments in favor of the bringing together of a large number of scattered agencies is the opportunity thus afforded of reducing the number of responsible heads reporting directly to the President. It is, as the President states, a "physically impossible" task to keep in close touch with some 30 major agencies. However, as the number of administrative heads having direct access to the President is reduced, the responsibilities of these direct contact officials will increase.

The three new agencies—Federal Security, Federal Works and Federal Loan—cover very wide fields of activity. The officials appointed to head the new organizations will have to be men of extraordinary ability to bring order and increased efficiency out of the confusion that will confront them. For the executive decree simply defines the coordinating tasks ahead.

The new agency heads, moreover, may be hampered by the retention in a subordinate capacity of various officials who have hitherto occupied independent positions. Thus, the Social Security Board would be retained, subject to orders of the new Federal security administrator. The Works Progress Administration is to remain substantially intact under the direct supervision of a commissioner subordinate to the new Federal Works administrator. Provision is made for continuation of the Public Works Administration also under the direction of a commissioner. Hence it will be seen that the new groupings might well tend to perpetuate certain agencies that might better be merged outright.

It would be a mistake to regard these initial executive orders as providing a definitive answer to the many reorganization problems that call for solution. There is considerable time for discussion of their merits, fortunately, before they become law under the terms of the reorganization act. During the waiting period it is to be hoped that Congress will give serious thought to the implications of the proposed changes and that the Administration will be receptive to all constructive suggestions for improvement in the plan as outlined.

The Rainmaker

From the Hartford Courant.

The nice old lady who equipped herself with an umbrella and sat down beside a pond in Florida to break the drought was applying the elementary principles of rain-magic. An umbrella suggests rain; rain is undubitably water, like that in the pond. Further, making her magic beside a half-empty pond was a hint that she wanted the pond filled up, a hint that even the most obtuse rain-god could not miss. Like all rain-makers who are persistent enough or who weave their spells at a time when rain is on the way, the magician of Frostproof, Fla., got her showers, although only a few drops fell where she was working her magic. But, as she explained, "I didn't say it would rain exactly where I'm sitting." Like successful magicians, her promises were sufficiently vague to give her a large chance of success.

Magna Carta Day

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Hon. Cordell Hull emphasized in his address last summer the clear-cut issue between "universal reliance upon armed force," etc., and "the practice of peace, morality, justice and order under law." Your readers will be interested in any plan to strengthen in our troubled world "justice and order under law."

It is becoming increasingly important at a time when democracy is everywhere weakened that all free nations should come together in behalf of constitutional government, but in order to do that there must be provided a rallying point.

No event could be more suitable for this solemn purpose than a general observance of Magna Carta Day, June 15, for the Great Charter was the beginning of the free institutions which have covered so large a part of the world.

The custom of observing Magna Carta Day was begun in the United States some years ago and has spread throughout the British Empire. It is not necessarily associated wholly with England and the United States, but it is and should be associated with the support of democracy everywhere.

J. W. HAMILTON,
Executive Secretary, International Magna Carta Day Association.

What Would We Say?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Supposing Chancellor Hitler should, in reply to the appeal of President Roosevelt, ask our Chief Executive if he is ready to give assurance to him that in the next ten years the United States would not attack Mexico, Argentina or any other Pan-American country?

Would the answer be "yes" or a reminder to Herr Hitler of the existence of certain treaties that would bar an armed attack? If it is "yes" would that bind us to nonaction if, for instance, Mexico should offer sufficient provocation or a casus belli?

If Herr Hitler answers, "Of course, our policy is one of peace, and we act only when the rights of the Reich are trampled upon or about to be," shall we place the American Nation in the position of judge when Germany is justified to act in cases where we ourselves would take similar action?

We are all for peaceful settlement of differences. My wish is—and I know many thoughtful Americans share in it—that President Roosevelt refrain from contributing his part in increasing the volume of war talk in the world today.

If President Roosevelt during the last week hadn't talked aggressively himself and hadn't practically taken sides in the various European questions his appeal to Messrs. Hitler and Mussolini would have carried much greater weight.

Save Democracy Here

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Gen. Hugh Johnson and some other writers are predicting that in event of another major war "democracy will be destroyed and dictatorships created in every country in the world, including the United States." Upon what, may it be asked, do Gen. Johnson and other writers base these dire predictions of "dictatorship" in the United States in the event of another war in which America might elect to participate?

If there is another major war in Europe, and the United States is drawn into it, we will go into it to succor nations like England and France against the danger of being subjugated by "totalitarianism" and as a long-range measure protect ourselves against the aggression of a super-totalitarian state in Europe which would surely arise on the ruins of popular government in England and France.

Then why should it be necessary or permissible to convert the Government of the United States, even during the war, into anything resembling the deadly forms of regimentation and totalitarianism which we would be fighting in other governments? Though a minister of the gospel, I am a life-long advocate of adequate preparedness for the United States—an army and navy, and aircraft sufficient to defend our own shores against invasion or serious damage, and to protect American rights.

The American people should devote themselves immediately to ascertain the unequivocal position of every potential candidate for President in 1940, and no man should be nominated by either major party who is not willing to take a position against every form of regimentation, dictatorship and limitation of freedom in times of war as well as in times of peace. No man should be nominated for President in 1940 unless he is willing to refrain from seeking regimentation and dictatorial powers in the event of another war in which the United States may become engaged, and to veto all such measures, should Congress pass them.

W. W. STOGNER.
Dallas, Tex., April 18.

German Children

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the April 25 Post news account of the preceding day's hearing on the Wagner so-called "refugee children's" resolution I am misrepresented. It was not I that "warned" that 20,000 children might increase to 600,000 in a few generations."

What I said when asked if "600,000 additional persons" ("if steeped in American traditions") "would be a good thing" was that "I do not know" that their addition will be a good thing, but "I will tell you what I think," arguing at great length that they would further increase our unemployment (12,000,000 at present), our relief burdens (30,000,000), our part-time employed (about 20,000,000), and that the memberships I represented were opposed because they feel our population is beginning to recoil upon itself and Lord Macaulay's prophecy in a letter to a friend here in 1857 is being fulfilled.

But, more important, I showed that if the Wagner resolution becomes a law it would not necessarily admit a single German child refugee and could result in the admission of 10,000,000 "German children," all Nazis and no one of them anti-Nazi, or "persecuted, because of race, religion or the political views of their parents or themselves." The Wagner resolution merely provides for the admission of 20,000 "German children under 14 years," because only that which follows the enacting clause is the law.

Wants More

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: About a week or ten days ago you published a very interesting article about the Albanian situation by Dr. Adolph Sturmthal. On the strength of that article we went to hear Dr. Sturmthal's lecture last Tuesday evening on the growing anti-Nazi influence in Germany. The hall was packed and we found him as interesting on this subject as he was in his article on Albania.

I should like to commend your paper for these enlightening articles on Europe—always to be found on your editorial pages—and I want to express here the hope that we may have more from the pen of Dr. Sturmthal.

We people who have been in the American foreign service abroad appreciate The Post's editorial pages. I for one am most interested in the complicated subject of Balkan politics. We cannot have too much on this interesting subject. Please give us more!

FRANCES DUFF.

American Youth

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Will Dorothy Thompson explain more fully what she means by the statement reported in The Post of April 23 in regard to admitting 20,000 German children in this country when she says, "We ne young workers in this country and it is a problem that we need to meet a little more intelligently than we have. We are not going to have a good country with the age group growing as it has been?"

She is also reported as saying that the measure would bring to the United States the kind of young citizens of whom she said it stands in need. What does she mean by casting such a reflection on our American youth seeking employment? ANNA M. HENDLEY.
Washington, April 24.

Barking Dog

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was an interested reader of the item in The Post of April 20, about the "Case of the Barking Dog" of Crescent place. I, too, live on Crescent place and have a small complaint to make. My grievance is very trivial and should not be mentioned to the Police Department in the same breath with anything so flagrant as a dog that barks in an untimely manner, disturbing the peaceful consumption of coffee and toast in the morning.

About two months ago my wife and I returned one evening to our small apartment at 1685 Crescent place and found our entire apartment had been ransacked, relieving us of at least $200 worth of clothing and jewelry—two fur coats, small seed pearl necklace and ring, two overcoats, a tuxedo and dress suit and the best suit I possessed—besides the radio.

The thieves made only one mistake—they did not have a barking dog with them. I am sure if this had been the case our property would have been promptly recovered and who knows the robbers might even have been fined $10 for maintaining a public nuisance.

THE "LOSER."

No Persecution Here

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As an American Boy may I ask why Dorothy Thompson et al want to import 20,000 German children? Miss Thompson says that the children imported under the Wagner-Rogers bill will not become public charges but she is silent on the children of the American slums, the children of the share-cropper or the Negro children. Are they to become public charges?

I am sure that the people of this country do not want the bill to pass because there are many times 20,000 children in this country with no future! Help the American child. He deserves our help more than the German child.

AMERICAN BOY.

Good Investment

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to express my appreciation of the good work you are doing in publishing the Directory of Educational and Recreational Opportunities in the District of Columbia. America is growing fast in cultural ways, is destined some day to lead the world in culture, and anything we can contribute toward that end in this day and generation will remain a perpetual and ever-expanding investment for the benefit of the American people.

The Biggest Trout

THE WATER bit hard and numbingly at your legs the first few days of the season. The snow was piled deep along the brook banks and ice-coated rocks made hazardous footing. Worms were burrowed deep in the still-cold earth and there was a chill and a frosty darkness in the early morning.

But because I had endured these hardships, because during the early season I had fished couragously if not well, because of this record I was not frightened when Ted proposed that we fish the Brook of the Falls.

The young summer was upon us then. Worms were once more near the surface and easy to dig. The snows were melted. School was out. There was a warm and propitious feel to the hazy dawn.

So I thought that the Brook of the Falls would be easy for a toughened, 14-year-old veteran of spring training. The name made it sound easy. It was like poetry. There had been nothing poetic about the names of brooks we had fished before. Murder Hollow was one; Broken Neck another. Brook of the Falls? Sissy stuff!

Now I don't want to pose as having been a New England Huck Finn although, come to think of it, I was a reasonably colorful youth. But, let me tell you, we boys went after fish in a hard and a primitive fashion. No rubber boots, no landing nets, no idea whether our rods weighed 8 ounces or 4 pounds. It didn't make any difference because we weren't sportsmen. We fished with worms.

Well, the water of the Brook of the Falls was warm when it soaked through my old trout-fishing shoes and swished up toward my knickerbockers. The stream was wide at its mouth and the trees that lined it slanted their branches free and clear. Then, unsuccessful at the shallow lower pools, we started to go uphill.

It happened suddenly. There was a plunge from light into darkness, from quiet into noise, from placidity into turbulence. Water white-capped against rocks, gripped at my knees like a tackler who would never let go. Trees arched grimly close overhead. Pools, like deep and swirling steps, marched upward to the base of the falls.

I saw Ted's lips move as if he were shouting, but his voice was drowned by the roar of the brook. He pulled a trout from his pool and dropped it into his creel. We moved to other pools, other steps toward the lacy-white backdrop of the falls.

So far I had had no luck, a usual thing with me. I was always glad that my breakfast was not dependent upon my fishing prowess. Ted had caught three, not counting a couple that were under the 6-inch minimum length. He generally hooked about three to my one.

However, undaunted by his success, I put a fresh worm on my hook, hoping that the trout that had eaten the last one was by now suffering from both indigestion and gout. I felt a faint pull at my line and snaked an infant fish to shore. I unhooked him carefully, first wetting my hands to avoid breaking the delicate, slimy coating on his body. If you break that, they die when thrown back.

Discouraged only a little, I clambered to the very bottom of the falls, conscious that I was risking my life in reaching it. And in those days I wanted to live.

Perched on a rock made slippery by the splash of the cascade, I baited my hook cunningly and cast it with care. It hit neatly in the center of the pool.

Zingo! There was a heavy tug at my line. My reel hummed. An enormous trout broke water, splashed back, leaped again. Excitedly I tried to play him. But the sight of a fish like that was too much for me. I slipped, tottered a bit, ended with an unclassical belly-flopper.

When Ted came up I was still splashing about the pool, my rod in my hand but the fish gone. Laughing cruelly, Ted stood on the rock that I had just abandoned.

"That," I shouted up to him, "was the biggest trout I have ever seen!"

Ted shouted back. "You," he yelled, "are the biggest fish I have ever seen." Then, shaken with laughter at his witticism, he slipped and fell in, too.

When I got home that afternoon my mother wanted to know whether I had been swimming.

"No," I told her, and hid myself in a corner to read some escape literature. HETER O'DOX.

Sea Power Discoverer

"BOOKS That Changed Our Minds" is the title of a series of articles which The New Republic has been running; and the books which changed the minds of this editorial group are those of Henry Adams, Thorstein Veblen, Franz Boas, Vernon Parrington, F. J. Turner and John Dewey, in this country, and of I. A. Richards and Oswald Spengler on the other side of the Atlantic. (Books by Charles A. Beard and W. G. Sumner, by Dr. Freud and Lenin are still to be considered in the series.)

Time will tell how many of those books really molded significantly the thought of a generation. Time has already told how the book of one American, published in 1890, would influence history. The first American biography of that man is published today: "The Life and Work of Capt. Alfred Thayer Mahan, U. S. N.," by Capt. W. D. Puleston, U. S. N. (Yale, $4).

"The navies of the world are all his disciples," says Capt. Puleston; and it is no exaggeration. The admirals of England, France and Germany have all confessed themselves students of Mahan's "Influence of Sea Power Upon History," although a great French admiral did express an opinion of Mahan's style which sorely distresses the admiring Capt. Puleston. "Ponderous, rambling, ambiguous and cloudy," said Admiral Castex, it would be "deplorable in any language." Deplorable or not, it found its goal. "We owe to your books," a British captain assured Mahan in 1894, "the £3,000,000 just voted for the increase of the navy." Oxford and Cambridge gave him honorary degrees in the same year. And the Kaiser assured Poultney Bigelow that he was "devouring Capt. Mahan's book; and am trying to learn it by heart . . . It is on board all my ships and constantly quoted by my captains and officers." Hostile critics have even charged it with responsibility for the World War.

Capt. Puleston traces the curious personal history of this apostle of big navies. His father was a martinet of an engineering professor at West Point, an author of books upon battles, though he himself never saw a battle. Alfred Thayer Mahan, born in 1840, was graduated from Annapolis on the eve of the Civil War. He saw service on the Brazil station before the war, in the blockading squadron during the war, on the West Coast of South America and in the Far East after the war; he never saw a first-class naval engagement. "From Sail to Steam," he called his own autobiography; he had indeed begun his naval service in days when all steamers still carried sail, and the navy operated much as navies had operated in the days of Nelson, Cornwallis and Collingwood. Before he left the service, the appalling modern era of naval expansion was in full flower (Mahan died in 1914); he was proud of his share in bringing it about.

Called to the War College at Newport in 1885 to lecture on naval history, Mahan prepared himself by diligent research at the Astor Place branch of the New York Public Library. It was there that he developed the theories of the preponderant importance of sea power which came to dominate the governments of the world. He was the first to give those theories effective formulation, though it might be argued that he was rather the spokesman of an age than a prophet. England had already begun its great naval expansion; Germany was already restive. The last great grab for colonies was coloring the last uncolored spaces on the maps of the earth.

IN HIS EARLY days Mahan was himself an isolationist, vigorously anti-imperialist. His growing admiration for the manner in which the British Empire had been put together converted him to the doctrine of an American empire. He began demanding the annexation of Hawaii, as essential for the protection of our own West Coast, in 1893; Capt. Puleston does not mention the fact, but Mahan's first appeal to take over Hawaii was based upon his fear that the Chinese would seize Japan and threaten the West! Mahan made many sound prophecies, but he was not always right; his biographer usually selects the successful prognostications for quotation.

HIS EMPHATIC temperament involved Mahan in a variety of disputes all through his active life—sometimes with his immediate superiors, who sneered at him as a "pen-and-ink sailor," sometimes with politicians, always with pacifists. "Honest collision" between nations, he held, was "evidently a law of progress, however we explain its origin; whether that be in the ordinance of God or in the imperfection of man." He was inclined to believe it the handiwork of God. Mahan was profoundly religious, and wrote upon religion as freely as upon sea power; in one of his essays he expressed a curious faith that the coincidences which had given Britain control of the strategic points of Gibraltar, Malta and Jamaica must be the expression of a Personal and Divine Will.

He was attacked as "unpatriotic" for his belittling of the role of the gallant Yankee privateers in the War of 1812; the navies of the world today follow his doctrine of massed force. His insistence that although the Battle of Waterloo may have ended Napoleon's power, the British navy had doomed it, was justified by the course of events in Europe twenty years ago. Mahan is not an inspiring hero for a biography, nor is Capt. Puleston's prose style more inspired than was his hero's; but the biographer has some of the older man's solid virtues. He digs out his facts and marshals them with precision. And Mahan's thinking upon sea power and land power and the course of history never had more tragic importance than it has today.

Will Canada Support Britain?

The Dominion's Attitude In Case Of War

By Raleigh Parkin

Montreal

THE RAPID DEVELOPMENT and increasing gravity of events in Europe inevitably compelled Canadians to take stock of their own position and to consider their attitude in the event of Great Britain becoming involved in war. Few Canadians fail to realize that on the day when the government of Great Britain decides that it has to go to war, Canada, by reason of the nature of its existing constitutional and legal relationships with Great Britain, will in fact immediately and automatically acquire the status of a belligerant.

CERTAIN ELEMENTARY facts about Canada must always be remembered. Canadians themselves too often choose to overlook them. The Canada of reality is a narrow fringe of population on the northern edge of the United States extending East and West from Atlantic to Pacific but hardly anywhere — Alberta excepted — possessing real depth. In 1931—the last census year—the population was 52 per cent of British origin, 28 per cent of French origin and 20 per cent of other origins, notably central European and Scandinavian.

In other words, this so-called British country contains a population only half of whom have any reason based on birth, sentiment, tradition or race for naturally looking to Great Britain, while alone amongst Canada's racial groups no French Canadian ever leaves Canadian shores "to go home." His only "home" is Quebec. Geographically the outstanding features are a solid British and Protestant bloc in Ontario; a solid French and Catholic bloc in Quebec; a highly heterogeneous population, including many central Europeans, in the prairie provinces; and dominantly British blocs at the extremites in British Columbia and the maritime provinces. Finally, religion adds a diverse and sometimes complicating factor, with 41 per cent of the Canadian population Roman Catholic and 50 per cent Protestant. A high degree of sectionalism is not the unnatural consequence of these facts.

THE ENGLISH or American observer may very easily be led to make a wrong judgment of the probable course of Canadian action in the field of foreign policy if he fails to differentiate correctly between the present as opposed to the ultimate significance of certain factors operating in Canada's political life. The growing North Americanism of the younger Canadian-born generation, the slowly rising tide of protest against the political and economic power wielded by the great English-Canadian business interests of Ontario and Quebec, the distrust of the controlling oligarchy that still rules the English democracy in Great Britain, the movement to clarify Canada's right to neutrality as an essential further step in the achievement of truly responsible government and toward the creation of a solidly based national unity—all these are factors of importance, but as determinants of national policy their significance is chiefly in terms of the future rather than the present.

At the present time two powerful groups of opinion will be the determinants of Canadian action and policy in any immediate future. The first is the politically important bloc of French Canadian Catholic opinion, centering in Quebec. The second, and ultimately the most influential, is the dominant British governing group who control the levers of power—in business, finance and the press—and who are by a combination of interest, sentiment and tradition most naturally in sympathy with the England of Baldwin and Chamberlain.

In the 70 years since Confederation, these two groups have established their power in Canada, the first intensively and locally in Quebec, the second by a concentration in relatively few hands of economic power whose influence permeates the whole of Canadian life, including Quebec. Thus it is that we find for the most part conservative pro-British elements in control wherever decisions on policy are made and where dissemination of news and opinion through the press is controlled. Underlying everything, there still exists a very genuine and widespread sentiment that regards Britain as the continuing living source of Canada's cherished institutions and traditions of liberty, and a still influential, even if numerically decreasing, group among whom ties of sentiment with the people and places of England, Scotland and Ireland remains strong.

THIS IS the political raw material with which any government in Canada has to deal in creating national policy, and it is hardly surprising therefore that Mr. MacKenzie King has stated more than once in recent years that the principal consideration for Canada in the shaping of any foreign policy is the maintenance of Canadian unity rather than consideration of her relations with Great Britain and the Commonwealth or with the United States—vitally important as both these are.

Against this background it becomes easier to anticipate the probable movement of Canadian opinion and policy. The recent debate in Parliament on foreign policy provided a cross-section of Canada's reactions to the latest European developments. These latter have now made it clear that any war in which Great Britain is likely to become involved will be, or certainly will appear to be, a war to defend her vital economic and political interests and liberties along with those of other democratic countries. To assisting Great Britain in such a war at any time in the near future there will be no serious or effective opposition in Canada. That can be said flatly, and the totalitarian powers would repeat the gross error made by Germany in 1914 if they should for a moment think otherwise.

THE PRINCIPAL FEATURE of the Ottawa debate was a lengthy and somewhat extraordinary speech by Premier King himself, in which, as Mr. J. S. Woodsworth, the leader of the Socialist Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, said, "the Canadian nationalist, the imperialist, the League of Nations' collectivist, the pacifist, the isolationist, the North American, the belligerent militarist—each will find some crumbs of comfort."

The speech was, no doubt, both Mr. King's recognition of the necessity of maintaining national unity by at least recognizing all points of view, and also an indication of his keen awareness of forces that may become much more important at a future date. But throughout his speech he gave the clearest indications that under any war circumstances that now seem likely, the Canadian government will move to the support of Great Britain, and in this position he was supported by the Conservative leader, Dr. Manion. Such discussion of the neutrality issue as occurred was more concerned with the question of clarifying the right to neutrality than with advocating a policy of neutrality.

At the same time, with his eyes on the more isolationist elements, especially in Quebec, he unreservedly declared against conscription of Canadians for service in a foreign war.

THE NOW obviously aggressive policies of Germany and Italy have without question created in Canada a preparedness to support Britain in any major struggle despite much bitter criticism of past policy and despite still existing doubts regarding some of the motives and interests operating on the mind of the present British government. In the longer future, Canadian attitudes may well change because of inescapable forces working within the country, but under the impact of war in the near future she will without question move once more to the support of Great Britain.

Recovery Pushed

THE SPRING rise which economists outside as well as inside the Government were forecasting a few months ago has not materialized. Within the Government the blame is placed primarily on the European war scare. Concerning the year as a whole, most of the leading Government economists are still moderately optimistic.

If the great war comes, its economic effects on us will be mixed, but the prevailing opinion is that we will quickly feel the economic tonic of war orders from abroad. The British and French own or control enough purchasing power in this country to give us a decided lift.

If the present crisis passes without war, and Europe remains relatively quiet for a time, our domestic business should enjoy a spurt, followed by a more gradual rise extending at least through the spring of 1940, in the view of the leading Government analysts. They see many signs that business is set for another upward move—not to a spectacular height, but high enough to make everybody feel better.

The peak of spending under the PWA program authorized last year will be reached in late June or early July. The slum-clearance program of the United States Housing Authority will push about $25,000,000 a month into the stream of buying power. The rearmament and merchant marine shipbuilding programs will move on a slightly ascending scale.

WPA Cut To Neutralize Other Stimulants

CONGRESS, of course, can neutralize the stimulation from Government spending and investment through other agencies by cutting the appropriation for the miscellaneous works program under WPA for the next fiscal year. The amount asked by the President will be substantially less than for this year. If Congress insists upon cutting severely the sum which he recommends, it will be taking on its shoulders a major share of the blame if we remain in the economic doldrums.

Senator Taft's charge that the war scare is a kind of frame-up by Mr. Roosevelt to divert attention from the New Deal's failures at home must seem absurd to everybody who reads the newspapers or listens to the radio. Several million men are not looking into each other's gun barrels, the navies of four nations are not concentrating in the Mediterranean, and the Japanese have not seized a screen of islands across the China Sea, extending their naval power 1,000 miles nearer to the rich Dutch and British possessions in the South Pacific and to Singapore—just to help Franklin D. Roosevelt out of his domestic, political and economic difficulties.

If the great war is averted or postponed on terms which preserve British sea power—for the preservation of British sea power is the nub of our practical interest in the current struggle abroad, the New Deal should be one of the beneficiaries. A great war might draft Mr. Roosevelt for a third nomination and bring about his re-election. But no one can foresee the consequences of a great war, whether or not we become a party to it, whereas a good many New Dealers are optimistic enough to think that if Europe will only remain moderately quiet the United States can get enough recovery to nominate and elect a progressive Democrat in 1940.

Tinge Of Wilsonism In Roosevelt's Policy

THE NEW DEAL is a domestic program. Mr. Roosevelt knows as well as anyone else that a World War stopped the domestic program of Woodrow Wilson and that our participation in that war led to a long period of severe, almost calamitous, reaction. During the last few years a good deal of the energy of Mr. Roosevelt and his lieutenants, and of Congress and the Nation, has been devoted to effecting social and economic reforms which should have been adopted 10 or 20 years earlier—and might have been if a World War had not intervened.

I do not believe that Mr. Roosevelt wants to be another Woodrow Wilson, even though his foreign policy shows a tinge of Wilsonism. He would much rather, I think, be another Thomas Jefferson, the founder of a political and social movement strong enough to be carried forward under the leadership of others.

As long as Europe remains mobilized as if for war, a "business as usual" slogan in this country will not be fully convincing. While it is sensible to be braced for the worst, it is no less sensible to make plans on the supposition that there will not be a major war abroad.

Economic Recovery Is Main Objective

ON THE HOME front, the Administration's program, at the moment, is amorphous. In a sense it has fallen victim to the vice of the conservatives—it is more concerned with protecting the status quo—in this case its reforms—than with pushing ahead. As the President emphasized in his annual message, the direction of the push should not be toward more reforms, but toward economic recovery. The maintenance of public spending and investment is one of the essentials, according to the New Deal view. But there are others among them: reorganization of the railroads, expansion of the housing program, tax revision to encourage risk-taking by persons with capital, the provision of better credit facilities for small businessmen who need capital.

The European scene is engrossing. But the realization that the home front cannot be neglected seems to be taking hold again in the Administration.

The Mote And The Beam

WHILE OUR public officials are conducting an energetic offensive against the ideas of the dictatorship, this country follows a domestic program which tends toward dictatorship and adopts many of the measures which are most susceptible of criticism under the dictatorship, such as a rapidly pyramiding increase in the proportion of the national income controlled by the state, programmatic deficit financing, the strangulation of private enterprise and initiative by taxation policy and the setting up in the WPA of a separate work economy demoralizing the working standards of the rest of the economy.

And now the latest move in the same direction is the proposal to barter American cotton against British-grown rubber and tin, together with an export subsidy for cotton.

Numerous Warnings Of Dictatorship Trend

THE WARNING as to the direction in which we are tending comes from numerous sources, Mr. Harry Scherman, in the April 22 Saturday Evening Post, has a brilliant article on the eventual meaning of a systematically unbalanced budget.

The latest report of the Brookings Institution is not at all in harmony with New Deal theories but, we are told, represents the views of the ablest men in the Treasury Department.

Nevertheless, the chance of these views being adopted is remote, in consideration of the political situation.

The reports from Bolivia describing the justification for the first totalitarian state on the Western Hemisphere are enlightening. President Lieut. Col. Busch has proclaimed a totalitarian state, with the abolition of the courts and the existing legal codes and the establishment of the whole paraphernalia of total dictatorship on the ground that that country can only be saved from bankruptcy by financial dictatorship, that such a dictatorship could not function under a democratic government and that certain capitalistic interests have been obstructing his efforts to solve financial and economic problems.

Logical Sequence Of Half-Baked Ideas

IT IS WORTH noting that the regime which has established the new system—which, from the first reports, closely follow the German model—started with half-baked semisocialistic ideas, and that the new dictator was the instigator of capital confiscation. The sequence is logical. The state having undertaken much, must undertake more and must have increased power in order to deal with its own errors.

In Chicago a controversy is going on over the WPA policy which deserves more publicity than it has received. Building contractors and trade unionists are protesting that building enterprises undertaken by the WPA—eliminating the contractor, disregarding established methods of operation, giving questionable supervision and overloading jobs—are bankrupting the building industry, and that the WPA is doing work with relief labor which undercuts the union scale.

It is perfectly obvious that building done under one system in which the laborer is paid a subsistence wage as stop-gap employment cannot indefinitely exist side by side with the majority system and both of them prosper. Some hope of a reform of this may be in the Burns bill, which would put all work of the Federal Government under a new Cabinet officer, who would have the power to decide how all public works should be carried out and who could, therefore, reform methods. But to create a new executive officer does not make a policy.

Barter Agreement Called Red Herring

AND NOW, finally, we see a barter arrangement proposed which bears a distinct family resemblance to the policies of the German government, which Mr. Hull's administration has been most consistent hitherto in opposing and the operation of which constitutes a legitimate quarrel with the Nazis.

The worst of it is that this barter agreement is just a red herring to divert attention from the breakdown of the triple-A agricultural policy. For the specific problem of cotton we are introducing a special arrangement by which we depress the international price and thus do our part to contributing to world price anarchy.

Mr. Hull's reciprocal trade agreements have had the primary aim of persuading the world of nations to agree on a common rule in their commercial relations. The aim is to do away with all discrimination and special favors and to have trade based on equality of treatment for all.

As such, it has been part and parcel of our whole foreign policy under Mr. Hull, which has been to stand for international law, international agreements and equality in all international relations.

U. S. Policy Claimed More Successful

FURTHERMORE, as late as April 18 the Department of State put out a press release stating that "The United States, with its reciprocal trade-agreements program, has been far more successful in restoring its trade . . . than has Germany with its policies of heavily subsidized barter and compensation trade."

The Secretary of State continues:

"I have frequently had occasion to point out that regimented foreign trade based upon the principle of bilateral balancing, implemented by barter or compensation arrangements, is fundamentally unsound and that such practices, when adopted as a general policy, not only constitute a highly disruptive influence in world commerce but are injurious to the very countries which utilize them. While there may be circumstances under which special types of barter arrangements may be considered necessary to supplement other methods of trade promotion, the substitution of a general policy of barter or compensation trade for normal . . . trade methods inevitably lead to a curtailment of total trade and reduction of living standards." . . .

There might, of course, be a justifiable barter if on the basis of a uniform price, but the barter proposal now made is not such a one. It consists of pegging the price here and letting the international price take the brunt.

Political Camouflage Seen In Measure

ONE IS COMPELLED to see in this measure a political camouflage for the bankruptcy of the New Deal agricultural policy since 1934, which, building on the Hoover farm board errors, compounded misplanning long before the authoritarian barter attack on world economy.

It bears a distinct analogy to the Brazilian coffee valorization, which ended with dumping and burning unmanageable supplies.

The world carry-over of American cotton is expected to approximate 14,500,000 bales by next August—the largest in history—and Government loan holdings, if no cotton is released before August, plus the expected crop of 13,000,000 bales, are estimated to bring the world carryover to four or five years of normal export requirements.

Since the Government's loan holdings were not hedged in the market, the barter deal will merely transfer stocks from the producing area—interested in stabilizing cotton prices—to the consumer, and will prevent a change in our policy in the direction of stimulating foreign markets.

The mere enunciation of the plan has virtually killed the export market. The anarchic price influence of the whole proposal means that the foreigner hopes to obtain his requirements at his own price, while the internal demand is affected by expected lower futures.

The scarcity of desirable cotton outside Government-loan stocks, and our previous scarcity policy which has stimulated foreign production; the high price of American cotton relative to foreign growths—these have meant that foreign exporters have been using less and less American cotton.

New Pork-Barrel Scheme Anticipated

POLITICALLY speaking, such a barter transaction, once begun, is bound to be extended to other commodities, which will demand to benefit from subsidies. So we introduce a new pork-barrel scheme, the mere apprehension of which will disrupt the markets of other commodities.

In its present form we will subsidize the foreigner without expanding our foreign markets and depress the world price level of cotton—and then, in all probability, extend loans to Brazil to offset the deflation of her cotton income, which our previous policy originally stimulated.

We will actually be the first to set the example of subsidizing raw materials that hitherto have had a free world market.

Dr. Claudius Murchison, president of the Cotton Textile Institute, challenges Secretary Wallace to explain why Great Britain, whose export of cotton goods is now less than half of what it was eight years ago, has not resorted to export subsidies. He rightly says that if she had, the United States would have been the first to denounce the plan and impose countervailing duties on British goods.

House Committee Kills Bill to Fix Farm Prices

By the Associated Press.

A movement to fix farm prices to cover the cost of production, plus a profit for the producer, came to grief yesterday when the House Agriculture Committee pigeonholed the proposed legislation, 17 to 6.

It was the first suggested substitute for the Administration crop control program to receive serious consideration in Congress.

An identical bill recently received the unanimous approval of the Senate Agriculture Committee. It has not yet been called up for consideration.

The legislation would guarantee farmers, for that part of their crops consumed domestically, a price determined by the Secretary of Agriculture to cover production costs of each farmer and a small profit. These prices would have to be paid to farmers by licensed processors, dealers and other handlers.

Encirclement

Husband—I don't feel right, I tell ya.

Wife—I've noticed it. You've been behaving very strangely. You're so irritable.

Husband—You'd be irritable, too. It's terrible.

Husband—I can't help it. I feel sore at everybody. I hate everybody.

Wife—What's the cause of it?

Wife—Encircled? Who's encircling you?

Husband—You . . . the children . . . the man upstairs . . . the neighbors . . . the letter carrier . . . everybody.

Wife—It's silly to have such an idea. How do you get that way?

Husband—Well, I went on a bust, threw rocks through the police station window and the cops demanded that I stop it. I picked a fight with the man upstairs and he didn't like it. In fact he called me down in harsh language. I kicked a dog belonging to a fellow in the next block and he wrote me a letter condemning the kicking of dogs, asking an apology and demanding that I promise not to do it again.

Wife—Is that encirclement?

Husband—That ain't all. Remember the other day when I needed some money and took it from the cash register at the drug store? Well, the druggist wrote me a sharp note demanding the money back, calling my attention to the law in such cases and threatening to notify the police.

Wife—He was quite right.

Husband—Right my eye! He was encircling me. The other day I drove my car down Main street through the red lights at sixty miles an hour, running over four people and crashing into a school bus. And what happened? I got a lot of stern demands that I stop driving while intoxicated, obey traffic lights like other people and never drive over forty miles an hour in congested thoroughfares.

Wife—Wasn't that reasonable?

Husband—Plain encirclement. But that ain't all. Do you know the straw that broke the camel's back?

Wife—No.

Husband—In that argument I had with you last night I threw a book end at you, ordered you to go home to your mother and chased you into the garage. And what did you do? You called me on the phone and asked me to make a pledge that I WOULD BEHAVE LIKE A GENTLEMAN FOR TEN YEARS!

Wife—I know, but . . .

Mary Haworth's Mail

Young Wife Is Baffled by Fickle Moods of Neurotic Mother-in-Law; Asks How to Cope With Her

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My husband and I are in our late 20's and have been happily married for a little over a year. My problem is my mother-in-law, who has a very complex disposition. My father-in-law often tells me he cannot understand her, as she is more or less of a neurotic. As we are from another city and only go home on visits, my husband's mother doesn't do as much damage as if she were living close by.

She alternates between being overly effusive and then so sarcastic and overbearing that I cannot even talk to her. While she has been very generous and has presented us with many things for our home, I have reached the conclusion that it is just her subtle way of placing us under obligation to her, as she likes to have people think her generous. When we first met I held her in high regard, and, while I am of a congenial and affectionate disposition, she has never returned my affection . . .

Some things that have happened recently are more than I can bear. A few months ago I was expecting a baby and had to be very careful. My mother-in-law said she couldn't understand why I had any trouble, as she was perfectly fine with all her children. Finally, I went home for a visit and one day she and I had planned to go shopping and have lunch downtown. That morning I felt ill, having spent a sleepless night of suffering, and I told her I thought I shouldn't go. She turned on me . . . I was afraid to say anything more and decided to go with her to preserve peace.

That night I was taken ill. After several days the doctor finally ordered me to the hospital (saying she was too nervous an individual for me to be around). I lost the baby, but tried not to give in to my feelings. Everyone sympathized with me but her. When I left the hospital, of course, I had to go back to her home and the dissension started all over again. . . . After five days the doctor decided the trip home would be the lesser of two evils. The night before I left, a friend came to dinner and commented on the painful experience I had been through. Immediately my mother-in-law snapped that it was nothing but imagination on my part.

Then, when she found I was leaving, she cried and acted as if she were the injured party—although nothing had been said about why I was going. She said I was very foolish and it was too much to expect my husband to take care of me. I made no answer. But the morning I left, my father-in-law told me he felt very sorry for me, but that his hands were tied and he could do nothing. Out of love for my husband, I forgave her then; and the next time we visited her she was amiability itself.

But not long ago we spent two weeks there and she started all over again. Toward the end of our visit she never spoke to me at all except to criticize and snarl. I am a very sensitive person and I brood over these things. I have been rather spineless in my attitude toward her and feel, if I gave her back in kind, she would have more respect for me. However, I do not like to hurt my husband, but friendliness seems of no avail. I have always had many friends and had a very successful career before I married—but my husband's people treat me like a moron.

Now we are again expecting a child, but I feel I can't tell her because of the treatment I received before. I would like to know just what attitude to take, because we can't go on this way, and for my husband's sake I don't want to break our relationship. I will certainly appreciate your advice. DAILY READER.

Pot and Kettle

DEAR DAILY READER: Neurotic your mother-in-law may be, but you are not above suspicion of suffering from the same ailment. There is a pronounced strain of babyishness evident in your whimpering self-commiseration. Moreover, you are under suspicion of indulging in a type of conduct known as "leading with the chin." If your mother-in-law is an unpredictable virago, why on earth do you stir up trouble for yourself by descending upon her several times a year for protracted visits (three of which are instanced in the foregoing bill of complaints)?

Frankly, I think you are stating the case against the lady far too strongly in attempting (by implication, at least) to fix blame upon her for the interrupted pregnancy. Whatever factors conspired to induce the lamentable stillbirth were peculiar to yourself, I should think—and are not to be attributed to your mother-in-law. Any woman of normal physique and essentially sound mental health can undergo suffering to the point, almost, of torture—of one kind and another simultaneously with pregnancy, and yet deliver a healthy child at the appointed time.

Once you were with child, your first business was to protect that budding life against any environmental threats to its existence. If your mother-in-law was guilty of flighty inconsideration, I think you were equally guilty of selfish negligence—in embarking, when under doctor's orders to be "very careful," on a journey leading to a visit in an environment that offered about as much peace and quiet as an agitated hornets' nest. I daresay you went looking for sympathy and sweet solicitude; hoping to be made much of; and that your mother-in-law, being of that hateful temperament which you impute to her, got a great deal of malicious satisfaction out of thwarting your artless expectations. One gets a mental picture of two attention-loving ladies trying to steal the spotlight from each other—the elder tending toward the sadistic side in her neurotic symptoms, the younger toward the masochistic side.

Your mother-in-law's baffling behavior is rooted, I suspect, in an inferiority feeling, leading to a feeling of emotional insecurity. At heart, she thinks nobody loves her; tries to buy her way into people's affections; is never sure she has gained her point, occasionally flares up in resentment and despair; and is fiercely (if unawarely) jealous of anyone who claims the devotion or attention of her loved ones away from herself. Probably she could never be convinced of this and will pursue her erratic course to the end. Your lamb-led-to-slaughter attitudes, on the other hand, also spring from an inordinate desire to be loved by everyone, which likewise suggests a personality not sufficiently stocked with basic self-esteem. If you would obviate the possibility of folowing in her footsteps, seek the cause and cure of that particular weakness.

The easement of this conflict is not to be found in adopting carefully thought-out, formalized attitudes—of a masked-face variety—toward your antagonist. The only remedy lies in developing maturity within your own personality. When you have learned how to stand on your own feet, psychologically, your mother-in-law's tantrums will affect your life as little as a high wind or a passing cloudburst affects a sturdily built house. Until you do learn how to stand on your own feet I advise you to cut your visits to your in-laws down to an irreducible minimum.

I am of the opinion that a level-headed young wife wouldn't be visiting her husband's people every whipstitch, anyway. I am also of the opinion that a mother-in-law is scarcely to be blamed if she takes to snapping and snarling at the daughter-in-law who settles in on her for one long visit after another, all within the space of little more than a year. Such untoward rubbing of elbows is bound to develop, among undisciplined personalities, that familiarity of attitude which breeds contempt.

There is no reason why you should tell your mother-in-law that you are expecting another child, if you don't want her to know. There is no reason you should visit her before the child is born, if you don't want to. You may even put her off visiting you, if she suggests such a counter-attack. Tell her you are not feeling up to visiting or to entertaining; that the doctor has ordered rest and quiet, no traveling and no guests. Do whatever seems best for the child's health, as determined by your own—and be calm, firm and sensible about it.

Spend the summer getting a saving slant on yourself as an erstwhile heavy contributor to this present tempest in a teapot. Wilfred Rhoades' excellent volume, "The Self You Have to Live With," might be of intestimable value; or perhaps the Washington Institute of Mental Hygiene, through its psychiatric staff, could suggest other equally (and, it may be, more) helpful books along the same line. Don't hide behind your husband's coat tails in this personality conflict with your mother-in-law. Don't say any longer that you are doing thus and so for his sake. Rest assured that you aren't contributing to his happiness by making a conscious martyr of yourself in his name.

Accept—if you must—the fact that your mother-in-law isn't ever going to be a beloved second mother; that she is, on the contrary, going to be a constant thorn in your side and dog-in-the-manger; and turn your attention to all the constructive materials you have to work with, in your married life. Remember that your safety lies in reinforcing your personality at its weakest points, to meet the pressure the situation imposes; and that no good whatever will come of pitying yourself or resenting her. If she doesn't fit into a happy picture, leave her out, and fetch other interests to fill the gap. M. H.

Victorian Tennis Costume

Debonair as the athletic ladies of a Godey fashion print is the tennis girl (above). Stylists predict women will soon be wearing such picturesque sportswear. If you like to set the style, even on the tennis court, score this suit now. Lusty blue and white stripes blaze down the blouse while the skirt repeats the same clean blue.

Cool imported chambray is the fabric, which is ideal for strenuous sportswear. The metal suit studs recall Prince Albert nicety of detail. This outfit was roundly applauded at a week-end fashion showing at the Shoreham Hotel

(Two Soliloquies)

THE MOTHER:

"And so he's going to marry . . . I wonder what she's like . . . She sounds all right from his letter—but then of course he's in love. And men never see things anyway in women—that is, the little important things.

"I do hope she's a sensible girl who won't expect too much . . . and who will save . . . and not want to spend every cent for fur coats and things. Or want to run to parties and night clubs all the time.

"If she could just cook—a little anyway. And know about vitamins and balanced diets. He needs to have someone to make him eat the right things—I never could. And maybe she can make him stop smoking so much.

"He really needs a little discipline—I was always too easy with him. If she's wise, she won't start in picking up after him—or waiting on him too much. Anyway, I bet he'll find he can't come home at all hours and expect to find his dinner hot and waiting.

"Of course he'll probably be a lot different with her—a man'll wait on his wife where he won't his mother. I really hope she leans on him some—but not too much. I hope, though, she's not one of those cocksure types . . . or too hard and sophisticated. These young girls make me feel so inferior—still, of course, it's Bill she's marrying.

"Still, if only she could just be the good dependable type that'd make a man out of him—not some little flibbertigibbet . . . and if she'd just be sweet and easy to get along with—I know I can get along with anybody who'll half try—and if she'd have some breeding . . . and some sensitivity . . . and understanding . . .

"Still, I suppose I'm asking a lot. And this must have been the way Bill's father's mother thought about me. She must have expected so much . . . and hoped for so much. And I wonder . . .

"Oh, well, I suppose I did the best I could. After all, you can't expect too much of young people. Anyway, I'll make the best of it whatever she is—for Bill's sake. But I do hope just one thing—I hope she's kind."

THE FIANCEE:

"I wonder what Bill's mother will say when she finds he's engaged. She's so crazy about him. Oh, I do hope she hasn't any silver cord complex and won't try to wrap herself around his neck. If she'll just leave us alone . . . and not try to run our affairs . . . or come around and tell me how to do things.

"I hope she's not a bossy old hen. She looks sweet in her picture, but you never can tell about those sweet women. Sometimes they're the worst devils of all.

"Still she'd almost have to be all right . . . to be Bill's mother. And he thinks she's so wonderful. But, of course, men never see anything wrong with their mothers. It's only their wives they criticize.

"One thing I do hope is that she has a lot of friends . . . and plenty of interests. Deliver me from those women who are too wrapped up in their children. The kind that you always have to be going to see and entertaining.

"I hope she's up-to-date and broad-minded . . . and not always shocked at things . . . and that we won't always have to be sh-sh-ing when she's around. And I hope she's not too set in her ways . . . or opinionated . . . or too terribly firm. And that she's easy to get along with. I know I can get along with anybody—if she'll half try.

"Now, if she just won't have any old-fashioned ideas about cooking . . . and big dinners . . . and indigestible foods. And if she just won't be the type that's hipped on kitchens and will follow you every time you go out to boil the water.

"If she'd only be sort of self-sufficient . . . and have a sense of humor . . . and be tactful . . . and understand things—oh, really we might have a lot of fun together if she would . . .

"After all, though, she is Bill's mother and even if she isn't perfect—well, of course, you can't expect too much. But I just do hope one thing. I hope she's kind."

Gardens and Flowers Abound at World's Fair Landscaping Expenditures Amount to $150,000

New York, April 25.

WE NOW TEETER on the very brink of this World's Fair—New York Type—and many interesting things are happening at the twelfth hour. What happens now is not publicity for Mr. Grover Red-Carnation Whalen's $155,000,000 show held on the reclaimed Flushing Dump. It is strictly human interest news of the first rate. Our fair needs no publicity at this late date. But the didoes in and about it are newsy, colorful and even comical in the extreme, and from this point of view I let you in on some of the more frabjous antics as of even date.

ALICE HUGHES

For one thing, we face the problem of sleeping and feeding a lot of company in a city already crowded. Alert merchants have been busy figuring out how to cram Aunt Min, Uncle Al and their progeny. They have arranged all sorts of stunts, such as comfortable studio couches for the living room, double-deck bunks for the spare room (as though we had such a thing here) and even trundle beds which can be hauled out when the folks come home dog-tired from the show.

The swankiest place on the grounds is the beautiful Terrace Club. Membership is thousands of dollars, but if you have a pal who belongs you can get in and see the McCoy—and even eat and drink it.

For the rest of us, the fair crawls with restaurants of all kinds—huge in scope and modest in price. Each one, naturally promotes some type of food or—pardon me—here or something, but they will feed us copiously and inexpensively.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—One of the biggest last-minute jobs in Flushing was landscaping and gardening the fair. At least $150,000 was spent on lawns and flowers and shrubs alone—lovely in themselves, and priceless in glossing over and hiding the rough inevitable in such new shows. The Netherlands has donated 1,000,000 tulips. From May 1 to summer's last gasp a blinding succession of flowers will fill the grounds—in 50 outdoor gardens and in the 900-foot horticultural hall. There will be 21 flower shows during the warm weather.

Cheese Dishes Now Part and Parcel Of Daily Eating

By Martha Ellyn,
The Post Food Editor.

NOWADAYS cheese dishes are part and parcel of our daily food. Here are a few bits to dress up the everyday eating.

ONION SOUP is no ordinary dish if served in soup ramekins topped with a slice of toast and sprinkled with grated Parmesan cheese. After the soup is heated, run the ramekin under the broiler long enough to melt the cheese.

POCKETBOOK ROLLS when buttered inside, and a paper-thin insertion of cheese added before heating, make an interesting change in the breadstuff.

STUFFED EGGS are good for other than picnics and lunch boxes if served in individual baking dishes with cheese sauce.

CHICKEN SALAD SANDWICHES, dipped in batter and fried like French toast, served with cheese sauce, solves the desire for a different sandwich.

Your Figure Madam

By Ida Jean Kain

Irene Castle, in 40's Keeps Slimness of 25 Years Ago Easily

IRENE CASTLE, whose slimness put an end to the vogue of the upholstered figure of the ponderous 1900's, refuses to accept the blame for the boyish form. She thinks that it was decidedly too thin and that the feminine figure is more attractive.

Nevertheless, Mrs. Castle is as streamlined today as in her famous dancing days—she weighs only 6 pounds more.

The main thing in keeping slim, Mrs. Castle maintains, is not to overeat. She thinks too many women overeat. She has a good breakfast and a good dinner but has lost the habit of lunch entirely because it slowed her up.

She is an individualist about her exercise. The only calisthenics she takes are the limbering-up type, which she takes in the bathtub! Her idea is that it is easier to exercise in hot water. She sits in the tub, pulls up and in with the tummy muscles and reaches over and touches the hands to the toes.

No Taboo on Her Age

You probably have your own ideas about where to exercise, but you can't overlook the common sense of Mrs. Castle's theory that "a gracerful posture is the best possible exercise becaues it goes on all the time." She also thinks that if the average woman would find a pleasurable exercise to do every day, she would never have to worry about her figure. Mrs. Castle has an extremely graceful carriage and she enjoys dancing as much as she ever did. Her theories certainly seem to work out, for her measurements are lovely; Bust, 35 inches; waist, 27 inches; hips, 36 inches.

"Not bad," was her comment, "for a woman of my age!"

And that was another of the many things I liked about Irene Castle. She carries her years so lightly that there is no taboo on the subject of age. Looking at her, I could scarcely believe that 25 years have passed since she was the rage of two continents.

Says Very Short Skirts Make Women Look Topheavy

"Was it really that long ago?" I asked doubtfully.

"Yes," she replied. "Isn't it awful? And I'll have another birthday on Friday!"

Well, Mrs. Castle is the first beauty I have met who was still having birthdays in her 40's. Most of them quit in their 30's. She had three children after 30!

Frowns on Short Skirts

Since short skirts are such a controversial subject, I asked this originator of styles what she thought of them. Here is her opinion:

"They make most women look top-heavy. The porportions are bad, and when we tamper with proportions we distort the figure. The Greeks were smart. They never designed fashions which distorted the figure. I've always thought that skirts should be midway between the knee and the floor—about 13 inches—for that is the length that becomes most women, most heights and sizes, up and down and around, too."

Iran's Legation Marks Coronation, Wedding In First Official Party Since Its Reopening

By Hope Ridings Miller,

A CORONATION CEREMONY three years ago in Teheran, ancient capital of Persia, and a wedding a few days ago in the same city, were celebrated last evening at a reception given by Iran's Charge d'Affaires, ad interim, and Mme. Hadjeb-Davallou.

The event was the first official party at the Legation of Iran since it was opened this year after having been closed since April, 1936, when the former Minister Djalal had an altercation with a Maryland traffic officer in what came to be known in Washington as "L'Affaire Elkton." Capital notables, including several foreign chiefs of mission, Cabinet representatives, members of Congress, State Department officials and a scattering of residentials were on hand for the party, which began as a reception and developed into a dance.

Diplomats from countries near Iran, and a few others in the company, knew exactly why the coronation of His Imperial Majesty Reza Shah Pahlavi of Iran was being celebrated with such fanfare. Three years ago the ceremony at which he became ruler was an epoch-making event, accented with traditional pomp and circumstance in Teheran. A much more recent cause for merrymaking was the marriage of His Imperial Highness Schahpur Mohammed Reza, Crown Prince of Iran, and Princess Fawsia, sister of King Farouk of Egypt, whose nuptial ceremony last Friday in Iran's capital is still being celebrated.

The entire staff of the Egyptian Legation attended last evening's party and each one in the group remembered, no doubt that the preliminary ritual that characteries most top-flight weddings in their country began March 15 in Cairo and then moved over to Teheran for the final rite. A few months ago Iran's Crown Prince went to Cairo for his first meeting with the princess who was to become his bride.

Toasts Drunk To Iran's Shah

The host and hostess received their long line of guests at the entrance to the ballroom. Mme. Davallou wore an attractive frock of seafoam chiffon, made on flowing lines, with a full skirt and fitted bodice. A corsage of gardenias further set off the pretty ensemble.

From the time guests began to arrive at 10 o'clock until they started to drift away several hours later, an orchestra held forth in the ballroom. Meanwhile, those who preferred conversation to dancing assembled in the drawing room and the spacious dining room, where a long table, centered with a huge bouquet of red and white carnations and laden with a bountiful spread, was surrounded.

Champagne and other drinks were served throughout the evening and as the evening approached the midnight hour, many a toast was drunk to the health and happiness of both Iran's ruler and the young bridegroom who will one day step into his father's place.

British Ambassador Among Guests

Among the early arrivals at the party were the Ambassador of Peru, Don Manuel de Freyre y Santander, who will become dean of the Diplomatic Corps upon the retirement of the current British Ambassador, Sir Ronald Lindsay, who also was among last evening's guests. It might well be inserted here that "decorations" were very much in order last evening; that virtually all diplomats who have them were decked out to the last medal and ribbon. Probably the most noticeable pendant of the lot was the huge, sunburst-effect medallion hung on a wide green ribbon and worn by the former German Consul General, Dr. Paul Schwarz, who with Frau Schwarz last evening concluded a brief visit in Washington and returned to New York, where they live at the St. Moritz Hotel.

Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, came on to the reception after attending the dinner at the White House and the ceremony afterward in which Rachel Crothers, famous playwright, received the National Achievement Award. James Clement Dunn, of the State Department, was there with Mrs. Dunn, who had on one of the prettiest frocks I've seen tihs season—a wood's green figured number cut on simple lines. The Chief of the European division of the State Department, Pierrepont Moffat, was there with Mrs. Moffett; also, Wallace Murray, of the Near Eastern division, who has been given much credit for patching up the relationship between the United States and Iran.

Many Notables Seen in Crowd

The former United States Ambassador to the Argentine, Robert Woods Bliss was there; also, the Minister of Rumania and Mme. Irimescu; Paul Alling, of the State Department, and Mrs. Alling, who was gowned in a filmy frock of heliotrope chiffon; Dr. Herbert Feis, of the State Department, and Mrs. Feis; Mme. Entezan, wife of the Iranian Charge d'Affaires to Switzerland, who is in Washington for a brief stay before going South. Mme. Entenzan arrived in a party with Mr. and Mrs. Drew Pearson.

The French Ambassador, Count Rene de Saint Quentin, came along shortly after 10 o'clock, and as usual was completely surrounded from the moment he arrived. The German Charge d'Affaires and Frau Thomsen were there; also, the Minister of Finland, Hjalmar Johan Procope, who came with Dr. Sigurd von Numers, Secretary of the Legation of Finland.

Still others there: The Counselor of the British Embassy, V. A. L. Mallet; the Commercial Secretary of the same Embassy and Mrs. J. P. Summerscale; the Minister of Guatemala and Senora de Recinos; the Minister of Uruguay, J. Richling; the Minister of El Salvador and Senora de Castro; the Minister of Siam and Mme Abhibal Rajamatri; the Minister of Lithuania and Mrs. Zadeikis; Representative and Mrs. Sol Bloom and Miss Vera Bloom; Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, who wore a smart frock of changeable gray and purple taffeta; the Minister of Latvia and Mme. Bilmanis; Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence C. Thaw, of New York; Mrs. Mark Bristol, who had with her Mrs. Irving Hall Chase, of New York.

The Friendlys To Live in Utah

Married in Reno, Nev., yesterday, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Friendly plan, after their wedding trip, to make their home in that State. Mrs. Friendly was formerly Mrs. Margaret Burch Holden and is the daughter of Preston Burch, Washington horseman.

Their marriage, of interest to friends in the Capital, Warrenton, and New York, marks the second venture into matrimony for both parties. Mrs. Friendly, who before her wedding in 1932 to Dr. Raymond Holden, jr., of New York, was Miss Peggy Burch, received her divorce yesterday in Reno from her first husband. She made her debut in 1928 and attended Bryn Mawr College.

Mr. Friendly married Miss Nancy Carr, of Atlanta, Ga., in 1927. They were divorced last month in Florida. He is a graduate of Phillips Exeter Academy and the University of Utah, and was formerly a member of the New York Stock Exchange. He is the owner of champion filly, Jacola.

Mrs. James L. Fieser, wife of the vice chairman of the American Red Cross, entertained at a luncheon yesterday at the Cosmos Club. Among the honor guests were Mrs. M. K. McKay, sister of Mrs. Fieser. Dr. McKay is the head of the economics department of the University of Pittsburgh, and he and Mrs. McKay motored down yesterday from Pittsburgh for a brief visit here.

Other guests included Mrs. Ellen Woodward, Mrs. Mary Collins, Miss Elizabeth Dyer, Mrs. Mary Clay Williams, Miss Christelle Ferguson, Miss Winifred Hughes, Mrs. Ernest Tallman, and Mrs. Lola Jaffries Hanavan.

Dorothy Reaney To Be Married To John Scharf

MISS DOROTHY REANEY

Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Reaney, of Pipestone, Minn., and Tampa, Fla., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Dorothy Claire Reaney, to John Regester Scharf, son of Mrs. B. K. Scharf and the late Mr. Scharf.

The wedding will take place in June in the Sixth Presbyterian Church in Washington, with a reception afterward at the home of the bride's brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. John R. Phillips, of Harvard Hall.

Harry H. Woodrings Entertain Relatives

Carroll, and the latter's daughter, Miss Faye Crooks, of Colorado Springs, Colo. Mrs. Carroll and Miss Crooks have been in Florida for a month, and returned to Washington with the Woodrings.

Also at the Shoreham, en route from Florida, are Mrs. Woodring's parents, former Senator and Mrs. Marcus A. Coolidge, of Fitchburg, Mass.

Isabel Anderson Says Farewell To Capital

Women's Press Club Fetes Washington Writer at Luncheon

Her magnificent home on Massachusetts avenue now the prized possession of the Society of the Cincinnati, Isabel Anderson, the writer, better known here as Mrs. Larz Anderson, widow of the noted diplomat, will leave Washington tomorrow for Boston. Her most recent work, "The Red Flame," with music by Henry Hadley, is to go on the boards in a Massachusetts theater this week, and she wants to be there for the opening.

One of her "farewell appearances" in the Nation's Capital, where she was a famous hostess for many years, was at yesterday's luncheon meeting of the Women's National Press Club, where she was honor guest. In a brief informal talk, she told something of the visit to Washington of a former King of Siam and his wife, who stayed in the Massachusetts avenue house. She mentioned that menus for the royal couple were planned down to the last dish by the State Department, and sampled by an official "taster" before they were put on the table for the King and Queen.

Still Has 'Home' Here

According to present plans, Mrs. Anderson will devote some of her time in the near future to collecting and editing some of the journals and papers of her late husband, who served this country as Minister to Belgium, and later, as Ambassador to Japan. She hopes to include his writing and some of his caricatures in a book, which, she said "would be much better than anything I could write."

In closing, Mrs. Anderson said she will be back in Washington to visit from time to time. A room for her has been reserved in the house that for many years was a mecca for both Washington and international society.

Miss Andress Among Guests

Also at the luncheon yesterday was Mrs. Anderson's house guest, Miss Mary Vail Andress, only woman officer of the Chase National Bank. Still other out-of-towners at the luncheon were Miss Gudrun Egedjerg, journalist from Copenhagen; Miss Kristen Peterson, also from Denmark, and Miss Mary Gaddie, of Scotland, all three of whom are here with 40 members of the Moral Re-Armament group, now visiting in this country.

Among other guests at the luncheon were Judge Marion Harron, of the United States Board of Tax Appeals; former Representative Virginia Jenckes who introduced the Congressional bill to make the Anderson house tax free after its presentation to the Society of Cincinnati; Mrs. William Chapin Huntington, who is also known as Frances Carpenter, the author; Mrs. Edward C. Moran, jr., wife of the Maritime Commissioner; and Mrs. Leon Henderson, whose husband recently was appointed chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Capt. J. H. Coffman Weds Daughter Of Col. Clark

Although away on only a brief wedding trip, Capt. John Henry Coffman, U. S. M. C., and Mrs. Coffman will not be "at home" until after June 15. Orders from headquarters make this necessary as Capt. Coffman, who is a law student attached to the office of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, will not complete his law examinations before that date.

Their wedding, which took place on Saturday, April 22, was a surprise one. After driving to Alexandria, Va., with the bride's father, Lieut. Col. Hollis Chenery Clark, U. S. A., retired, the couple were married by the Rev. William McIlwaine at his home on St. Asaph street.

Among close friends of the bride who witnessed the ceremony were Miss Eunice Wilson, Miss Martha Townsend and Miss Mary Schick.

The former Miss Mary Chenery Clark is a graduate of the Madeira School and Vassar. Capt. Coffman is the son of Mrs. John L. Coffman, of Holdenville, Okla., and is an alumnus of the University of Oklahoma.

America for Americans Urged by Rep. Byrns

Legislator Tells U. S. Daughters of 1812 He Favors Tightening of Immigration Laws, Clear Check-Up on Aliens

By Jessie Ash Arndt,

America for Americans was the theme of the address of Representatve Joseph W. Byrns (Democrat), of Tennessee, last night at the banquet of the U. S. Daughters of 1812, the climax of the three-day session of their forty-seventh annual associate council. Advocating tightening of the United States immigration laws, closer check-up on aliens and declaring the Wagner-Rogers bill to admit 20,000 German refugee children, "an opening wedge for the introduction into this country of other aliens," his address followed closely the sentiment of the council, expressed in resolutions passed earlier in the day.

Citing the number of unemployed in the country, Representative Byrns asserted he was opposed to bringing in any more. He declared, "America must not be made the dumping ground for undesirables from other nations," and criticized the failure on the part of the Department of Labor in 1937 to deport aliens found to be subject to deportation.

Discussing other groups, he named Jimmy Londos, the Greek wrestler, and Greta Garbo as examples of professional aliens who, under the present law, are permitted to enter this country without respect to quotas from their countries, and return home "accompanied by a great many American dollars."

"The most amusing thing to my people in the South was the choice of an unnaturalized English woman residing in this country to play the part of Scarlett in "Gone With the Wind," he added.

Mrs. Arthur J. O'Neill, of Chicago, president national of the United States, Daughters of 1812, introduced Representative Byrns and also John Clagett Proctor, Washington historian, who talked on "The Capital in the War of 1812."

A paragraph expressing sympathy for the persecuted children of Europe but saying she did not believe the United States should allow them to find refuge here, was included in her report at yesterday's business session.

The council's resolution registering opposition to the Wagner-Rogers bill also mentioned the "humane intention" embodied in it, but went into detail as to the possibility of the refugee children competing with American children for jobs when they were a few years older. The resolution recommended that the homes which should be opened to the child refugees be made available instead to American children now on relief.

The council pointed out in another resolution, "There has been great laxity in enforcement of existing immigration laws through the Department of Labor," and indorsed legislation to amend the Constitution to exclude aliens in counting the whole number of persons in each State for the apportionment of representatives; provide for the deportation of aliens who advocate loyalty to other governments; to authorize deportation of criminal aliens and to authorize the Secretary of Labor to deport aliens whose presence is inimical to the public interest."

The council also went on record in opposition to Senator Key Pittman's bill conferring on the President discretionary power to declare who is the aggressor nation, asserting the right to declare war, conferred on Congress by the Constitution, should be upheld.

A resolution protesting a change in the present neutrality laws also was presented, but was laid on the table. Others were adopted in favor of the preservation of Stephen Decatur House as a museum and asking an appropriate inscription for the monument marking the battlefield of New Orleans.

The council will have its closing sessions today and other resolutions are expected to come before it.

Voteless Women to Ask Council For Aid in Getting D. C. Suffrage

Mrs. Ottenberg, President of Local League, To Present Request; Executive Body To Discuss Legislative Program

Mrs. Louis Ottenberg, president of the D. C. Voteless League of Women Voters, is scheduled to present to members of the general council of the league this afternoon a plea for aid in obtaining the vote for the District.

Since she came into office as president of the local league, Mrs. Ottenberg has worked tirelessly for national representation and local self-government for the District. This is among the items on the legislative program of the national league and will be supported through the work of the State organizations.

The session this morning will be devoted to discussion of the league's legislative program with Mrs. Paul Eliel, secretary, presenting the proposed changes. These are expected to include a discussion of the neutrality act on which the league, with five other leading women's organizations, has been urging greater flexibility and discrimination against aggressor nations, and the Ludlow war referendum, which league members have been studying, both pro and con.

Legislative methods will be discussed this afternoon under the leadership of Mrs. Jarris T. Baldwin, of Washington, vice president in charge of legislation.

Dr. Goddykoontz Talks on Federal Aid

Mrs. Roscoe Anderson, national chairman of the Department of Government and Education, was guest of honor yesterday at a luncheon sponsored by that department of the local league at the A. A. U. W. Clubhouse, and addressed by Dr. Bess Goodykoontz, assistant commissioner of education.

Dr. Goodykoontz, discussing the general subject of "Federal Aid for Education," pointed out the need for equality of opportunity for children throughout the country. Only 70 per cent of those between the ages of 14 and 18 are in school, and the amount and kind of schooling they receive are inequitably divided, she said.

"It makes just an awful lot of difference where you get yourself born, the kind of elementary education you receive," she said. The number of days of school range from 130 in some sections to 190 in others; the range in expenditure per child, from $18 to $115, with $58 as the average for the country. Teachers' training in some rural areas ends with high school and the salary is generally about $40 a month. Arkansas, Mississippi and Alabama are the States at the bottom of the list, she said.

More Children, Less Wealth on Farms

The reason for the great variation is that rural sections have a greater number of children and less wealth while industrial centers, where the wealth is, have proportionately fewer children. Dr. Goody Koontz sees in general Federal aid provisions a remedy. Specific Federal aid such as that now available for land grant colleges, vocational education and farm extension courses does not necessarily equalize opportunity, she said.

Humorous skits were presented last night by members of the national staff, the national board, and the Washington League at a supper meeting at the Gingham Club.

At tonight's banquet the theme is "The Liberty We Prize," with Mrs. Roosevelt and Judge Florence E. Allen as principal speakers and Mrs. Robert A. Taft as toastmistress. Louise Leonard Wright, chairman of the department of government and foreign policy, will present the international aspect on this subject.

95,000 Wait U. S. Merger's Effect on Jobs

No Estimate of Possible Dismissals Is Available

Approximately 95,000 Government employes, including 30,000 in Washington, were wondering last night which of their jobs may be abolished if the President's reorganization plan meets no obstacles on Capitol Hill.

It appeared unlikely that any accurate information as to dismissals will be available until the merger of agencies and functions should take effect—at least 60 days hence.

Spokesmen for Government employe organizations expressed doubt that the $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 estimated economy will all come from personnel reductions. They pointed out that savings may be made in rent and overhead expenses as well as in salaries.

Merit Protection

Civil service employes, which includes the majority of those affected, will have the customary protection of being placed on preferred lists for reemployment in other Government agencies as vacancies occur, it was pointed out.

Emergency employes, chiefly in the WPA and PWA, will have no recourse or claim on the Government if dropped.

WPA has the largest number of employes of any agency involved in the reorganization. It has 36,000 administrative workers, of whom 2,000 work in Washington, it was estimated. HOLC is second with a roll of 11,500

Agencies Affected

Out of a total of 9,800 PWA employes, 2,500 work in the District and 7,300 in the field. Social Security Board has 9,000 employes, Public Health Service 6,400, the Procurement Division 3,800, the Farm Credit Administration 3,500 and the RFC 3,850.

Other agencies affected and their enrollments are: Education Bureau, 1,893; Budget Bureau, 200; Commodity Credit Corporation, 200; Central Statistical Board, 50; Employment Service, 809; Bureau of Public Roads, 2,872; Export-Import Bank, 50; Federal Home Loan Bank Board, 350; Electric Home and Farm Authority, 150; U. S. Housing Authority, 1,500; National Resources Committee, 200; National Youth Administration, 150, and Civilian Conservation Corps, 68.

Liaison Man Planned

President Roosevelt disclosed in his message that he intends to set up an administrative assistant "to serve as liaison agent of the White House on personnel management."

The President pointed out that he is barred by the reorganization act from transferring to the executive office "the administration of the third managerial function of the Government, that of personnel."

His only reference to contemplated reduction in employes was in the listing of five "definite purposes" of the act, the fifth of which was "to eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort."

There will be no abolition or curtailment of governmental functions, the message to Congress stated, and the reduction in expenditures "must necessarily be brought about chiefly in the overhead administrative expenses of the agencies set to perform certain functions."

Lewis Notes Similarity

Burdette G. Lewis, author of the report on District relief, said yesterday that President Roosevelt's plan for grouping welfare agencies followed in a large degree the outlines of his own proposal for reorganization of District welfare agencies.

"I was greatly gratified to notice the similarity," he said. "Whether or not it is a coincidence, of course, I cannot say."

New Day Flight To California From D. C. Listed

A new daytime flight from Washington to California and increased service between Washington and New York will be inaugurated Monday over American Airlines, H. D. Ford, district sales manager here, announced yesterday.

Leaving the National Capital at 8:40 a. m., the Plainsmen will arrive in Los Angeles at 12:29 a. m. the following day.

Flight 11, which leaves Washington for Texas at 11:45 p. m., will depart in the future at 2:10 p. m. Service to New York will be increased to five flights daily, Ford said.

Additional service has been made necessary to cope with unusually heavy gains, he added, explaining that "the business increase over American's entire system during the first ten days in April was the heaviest in the company's history."

600 Open Episcopal Parley Here

Dean Washburn Urges Adherence To Essentials of Unchanging Gospel

Voicing a plea for adherence to the essentials of the "unchanging gospel," the Very Rev. Henry B. Washburn, D. D., LL.D, dean of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass., last night joined with other ecclesiastical dignitaries in launching the first Triennial Episcopal Church Congress here.

Delivered in the Washington Cathedral, the dean's address was heard by more than 600 persons, including some 300 delegates, many of whom marched in the colorful procession which opened the program, also highlighted by a message of welcome from the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, and honorary chairman of the congress.

Also participating in the procession into the Great Choir were more than 200 singers from Ascension, Epiphany, St. Alban's, All Souls', St. Margaret's and Trinity parishes, as well as clergymen from the Washington Diocese, led by the Bishop. Adolph Torovsky, Epiphany choirmaster, and Miss Charlotte Klein were organists.

Dr. Aldrich Presides

"The Gospel and the Predicament of Modern Man" is the general theme of the conclave.

Dr. Donald B. Aldrich, of New York, general chairman of the Congress, presided over the session, in which Dr. Ze Barney Phillips, Epiphany rector and Senate chaplain; Dr. Charles T. Warner, St. Alban's rector, and chairman of the Washington committee, and others took part.

"However much the forms of Christianity may modify and differ from age to age," Dean Washburn told his hearers, "and however unlike the church may now seem from the Church of the Apostles' day, there is still the same Gospel."

Quoting Christ's words that "heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away," the cleric said "these words proclaim that not only imperfect institutions and men of low ideals have within them the qualities which foretell destruction, but also that the outward form of the most perfectly conceived institution, and the details of conduct of even the noblest of men are of a transitory nature."

"They bring one to the truth which stands out as clear as the day that Christ-like devotion and Christ-like unselfishness alone are essentially productive and alone are essentially permanent, and that whatever varying forms they take, either in conduct or thought, or institutions they will accomplish the right results."

"Inconceivable though it may seem, that time may come," continued Dean Washburn, "when men will look back upon our church and its government as a necessary stage in the development of a society which at that future day will much more effectively do the work of God and show Him forth to men."

Reception in Garden

The congress, the first of which was held in 1874, and the purpose of which is to bring together clergy and laiety for discussion of common problems, will open its second day this morning at 7:30 with services of holy communion in St. John's Chapel, the Cathedral.

At 10 a. m., in St. Alban's Guild Hall, the Rev. Frederick C. Grant, D. D., Th. D., of Union Theological Seminary, New York, will speak on "The Gospel and the New Testament." Luncheon for delegates is set for 12:30 p. m. in Satterlee Hall, Bishop Freeman presiding.

Other features of today's program will include a reception in the bishop's garden at 4:30 p. m., with the Bishop and Mrs. Freeman as hosts; an address on "Preaching the Gospel," by Dr. Henry Sloan Coffin, president of Union Theological Seminary, in St. Alban's Church, at 3 p. m., and a message at 8:30 p. m. in St. Alban's by the Rev. Leicester C. Lewis, S. T. D., of Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, on "The Gospel as a Message." The Rev. Charles W. Lowrey, jr., Ph. D., of Virginia Theological Seminary, Alexandria, will also speak.

Preparing to leave the city after a honeymoon visit, Charles Germas, 22, of Manchester, N. H., was robbed of $10, a diamond ring worth $150, and a 21-jewel gold wrist watch by penny matchers at Union Station.

The youth said he was approached by a middle-aged man, who suggested that they take a walk. After going a short distance from the station they met a second man, Germas said, who insisted they match pennies.

Germas said he lost and posted the watch and ring with the first man for collateral.

FBI Man Talks To G. W. Engineer Alumni at Dinner

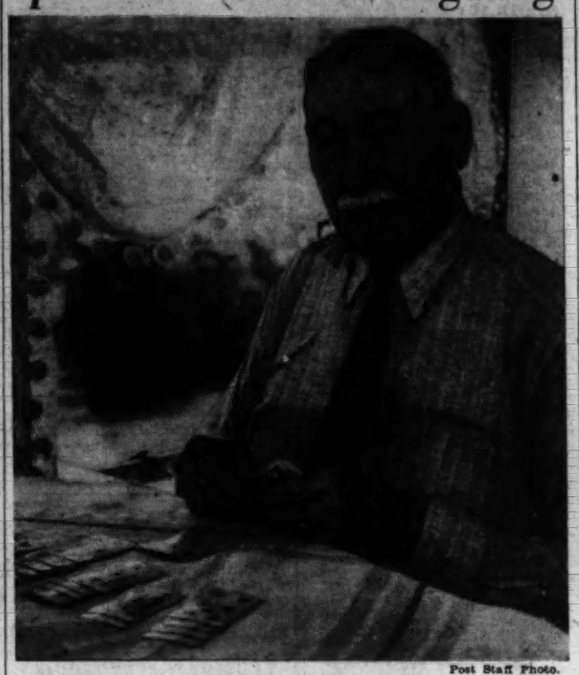

Crime detection today involves as many scientific problems as engineering, E. P. Coffey, of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, last night told 40 members of the Engineer Alumni Association of George Washington University at a dinner in the Benedick Hotel.

Dr. Martin A. Mason, of the Bureau of Standards, said America should "leave Europe strictly alone."

SIDNEY SHIPMAN

Now Ticket Taker at Griffith Stadium, He Was For 46 Years an Examiner in Pension Bureau; Doesn't 'Want to Get Out of Circulation'

(This series is about men and women 70 or older who are finding so-called "old-age" is really a lot of fun. They still are producing and getting a big thrill out of their work or hobbies. You know some qualifiers. Tell us who they are.—Editor's note.)

By Gerald G. Gross.

All his life Sidney A. Shipman has been an investigator. As a young Kansas farmer he investigated his 240 acres regularly to see how the crops were doing. Then he came to Washington, joined the Government and spent the next 46 years as a special examiner in the old Pension Bureau and special agent in the General Land Office. Ten years ago he was retired, and ever since has been stationed at a Griffith Stadium gate, investigating clients to determine whether they hold credentials of admittance for that day's baseball game, football game or wrestling match, as the case might be.

"These last 10 years," he said yesterday, "have given me the most liberty and fun I ever had. Until I reached 70 and retired, I rarely had an opportunity to relax, having a large family to rear and support. But ticket taking, now that's a pleasure."

Tall, erect and sturdily built, Mr. Shipman took the ticket taker's job not for the pay in it but "because I didn't want to take myself out of circulation." A month or so after the season ends he and Mrs. Shipman go to Florida for the winter. Passionately fond of baseball, he is in Orlando when the first rookies arrive and rarely misses a practice during the entire training period.

Engineer Students Dinner Guests of Electrical Group

More than 150 students from four universities last night heard leaders in the field of electrical engineering declare that opportunities exist today as much as in the days of Thomas Edison for the man who tries to push back the frontiers of engineering knowledge.

They were guests at the "Student Night" dinner meeting of the Washington section, American Institute of Electrical Engineers, at the Hotel Harrington.

William McClellan, president of the Potomac Electric Power Co., was toastmaster. Speakers were Prof. John B. Whitehead, director of research, Johns Hopkins University; Dr. John H. Parker, New York, vice president, Consolidated Edison Co., and president of the A. I. E. E.; Prof. William B. Kouwenhoven, dean of the school of engineering, Johns Hopkins, and director, A. I. E. E., and H. H. Henline, New York, national secretary, A. I. E. E.

Rep. Murray, Door Locked by Child, Calls Fireman

Firemen of No. 2 Truck Company last night climbed a ladder to admit Representative Murray (Republican), of Wisconsin, and Mrs. Murray to their second-story apartment at the Fairfax Hotel, police reported.

Hotel attaches said the door to the apartment had been bolted by 8-year-old Hyde Murray, who could not be awakened to admit his parents.

S. E. Citizens Protest Penal Wharf Site

Presidents of Four Groups Say Eastern Area Has Enough UnfavorableBuildings

Presidents of four east Washington citizens' and business associations last night protested the proposed erection of the penal wharf on the Fourteenth street southeast site at a meeting of the Southeast Washington Citizen's Association last night.

After the presidents had urged "every means possible" to block the construction of the wharf in eastern Washington, the Southeast organization voted to demand a Congressional hearing to voice their protests officially.

The move was taken after William A. Maio, president of the Southeast association, said a committee in a protest hearing before the Commissioners last week failed to block the transfer of penal wharf, now on Main avenue.

Leading off the mass protest of the associations, Adelbert W. Lee, president of the Randle Highlands Association, declared Southeast has "enough such unfavorable institutions." The penal wharf, he said, not only would be an eyesore, and depreciate land values, but add to problems of police already taxed to handle traffic congestion.

Alfred D. Calvert, president of the Lincoln Park Citizens Association, opposed on principle "the idea of dumping unwanted buildings in East Washington" and urged as an alternate site Buzzards Point near the junction of the Washington Channel and the Anacostia River for the penal wharf.

The Point site, which had assertedly been opposed by the Commissioners as carrying too high an assessed property valuation, would be more suitable for the wharf, being more accessible to barges bearing prison goods from Occoquan Workhouse to Federal departments which they supply, Calvert asserted.

J. Lewis Gelbman, president of the Congress Heights Citizens Association, also favored the Buzzards Point site for similar reasons and guaranteed support of the Southeast Association's demand for a Congressional hearing as did Arthur Shaffer, president of the Southeast Businessmen's Association.

Appointed to a committee to represent the Southeast Association at the proposed Congressional hearing were the Rev. George H. Bennett, John Schmitt, Mrs. Milton Prosperi, Mrs. Alyse Thume, Mrs. Ada Minnix, Vernis Absher, A. F. Raum, W. J. Carey and B. J. Ladd.

Hampshire Heights

A request that all emergency vehicles—police cars, fire engines, and ambulances—be equipped with colored lights was made last night in a resolution by the Hampshire Heights Citizens Association, in Barnard School.

Harry J. Miller, chairman of the police and fire committee, in offering the resolution, pointed out that the colored lights would help prevent traffic accidents.

Dr. Harry Dowling, pneumonia specialist, described methods of preventing and fighting the disease. Functions of the Health Department were explained by Dr. Melvin Isaminger. Harry Wender, president of the Southwest Citizens Association and a member of the traffic advisory council, discussed traffic problems.

Fifteenth anniversary of the Pierce Butler Law Club of Georgetown University was celebrated last night with a banquet at the Carlton Hotel. Associate Justice Pierce Butler of the Supreme Court (right) attended with his son, Pierce Butler, jr. (left), and his grandson, Pierce Butler 3d (center)

Three generations in the Pierce Butler family joined last night to celebrate the fifteenth birthday party of the Georgetown University Law Club bearing their name. Associate Justice Butler, of the Supreme Court, his son, Pierce Butler, jr., of St. Paul Minn., and his grandson, Pierce Butler 3rd, a student at Harvard University, were present.

Meeting with the Pierce Butler Law Club were the Edward Douglas White and Ashley Mulgrave Gould clubs.

Frank J. Hogan, president of the American Bar Association, told the group that allegations that lawyers had lost their former positions of public leadership were false. He declared that 70 per cent of all State and Federal officers elected in the 1936 and 1938 elections were members of the bar and that the percentage of attorneys in the Congress was higher than at any time in the Nation's history.

Other speakers were the Rev. Francis E. Lucey, regent of Georgetown University Law School; Leo A. Rover, former U. S. attorney; Assistant Dean Hugh J. Fegan and Albert Torres Gonzales, blind senior student who spoke on the life of the late Chief Justice Edward D. White.

Death Report Asked on Nurse At Gallinger

Ruhland Seeks Data; Nichols Requests New And Secret Inquiry

Representative Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, yesterday introduced a concurrent resolution calling for a special investigation of the administration of Gallinger Hospital as Health Officer George C. Ruhland requested a report on the death of a nurse from Supt. Edgar A. Bocock.

Ruhland met yesterday with Dr. Cloyd H. Marvin, president of George Washington University, and the Very Rev. Arthur J. O'Leary, president of Georgetown University, to discuss the Gallinger Hospital situation.

It was announced after the meeting both the visiting staff physician and resident physician were in "complete sympathy" in the case. It was stated that Dr. Walter A. Bloedorn, chief of staff at Gallinger, had submitted a report which supported this viewpoint.

No Funds Needed

Nichols' resolution provides for the appointment of two members each from the Senate and House District Committee and Senate and House sub-committees on District appropriations. Appointment would be made by the chairmen.

No funds will be needed to employ an investigator or attorney, Nichols said, and the inquiry will be conducted behind closed doors so that witnesses will feel free to talk.

Meanwhile, Chairman King of the Senate District Committee indorsed the proposal in the District supply bill for appointment of a chief medical director at Gallinger.

King Expresses Concern

Expressing concern that the dispute between the Health Department and the medical schools of George Washington and Georgetown Universities had flared again, Senator King said he believed that control of the municipal hospital should remain in the hands of the District rather than the visiting physicians.

Representative Bates (Democrat), of Kentucky, who conducted a recent Gallinger investigation, expressed the belief that no additional investigation is necessary.

"There's too much politices involved in the running of Gallinger Hospital," he said. "I think the best thing we can do is to let them alone to straighten out things by themselves.

Labor's Factions Urged to Unite on Political Issues

The dispute between the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organization may never be settled but they can agree on political issues, Cecil Owen, publicity director of Labor's Non-Partisan League, told the Washington committee of the Women's Trade Union League last night at a meeting at the Young Women's Christian Association Building.

Roosevelt or some one he favors will be elected in 1940, he prophesized, "or else it will be a Republican."

Ridiculing the idea that an anti-New Deal Democrat had any hope, he called Vice President Garner "the Republican's candidate for the Democratic nomination."

English Writer Says Duce Wants To Check Hitler

Graham Hutton, of the London Economist, and author of the recent book, "Survey After Munich," told students at George Washington University last night that Mussolini is just as interested as Great Britain and France in keeping Germany out of the eastern Mediterranean.

Hitler's expansion through Austria, Hutton pointed out, has reduced Italy's strategic front to what it was in the World War, when, he said, her troops crumbled under the downward drive of Germany and Austria.

Practical Method of Analyzing Bile Called Need of Doctors

Dr. Martin Rehfuss, of Jefferson Medical College, Addresses District Society's Postgraduate Assembly on Diagnostic Problem

One of the greatest needs in diagnostic procedure is a practical means of analyzing chemically the bile, the substance secreted by the liver which plays an indispensable role in digestion, the District Medical Society was told last night.

Dr. Martin E. Rehfuss, of Jefferson Medical College, guest speaker at the society's annual postgraduate assembly, emphasized the importance of the biliary tract not only as a factor in gastro-intestinal conditions but for its influence in nearly every disease, mental as well as physical, to which the human body is susceptible.

One of the problems still confronting medicine, he said, is what leads up to infection of the gall bladder, the sac which encloses the bile when it is not at work emulsifying fats. Solution of this mystery will go hand in hand with the solution of the bile's chemical makeup, he indicated.

700 Registered

The Philadelphia physician's lecture was followed by a stag smoker, final event of the first day's session. The assembly, which is being held at the Hotel Mayflower, will be concluded tomorrow.

Officials of the medical society last night announced the highest first day's registration—nearly 700—in the history of the annual assembly, indicating an attendance in excess of 1,000 before the meeting closes.

Earlier in the day, Dr. Eloise B. Cram, senior zoologist of the National Institute of Health, shed new light on the prevalence of pinworm in the District, pointing out that in the course of testing a new type of swab 2,300 Washingtonians were examined and 39 per cent were found to be afflicted with pinworms.

Dr. J. Russell Verbrycke, jr., described a new diagnostic instrument, the peritoneoscope, which makes it possible, through a half-inch incision to visualize the interior of the abdomen in puzzling cases and to take speciments of tissue suspected of being cancerous.

Commentator Speaks

Other speakers yesterday on technical phases of diagnostic procedure in diseases of the internal organs included Drs. Othmar Solnitzky, E. C. Albritton, Charles A. Millwater, Willian Ballinger, David Davis, Fred A. J. Geier, B. F. Dean, jr., Leo T. Brown, John A. Reed, Oscar B. Hunter, Claude Moore, Joseph F. Elward, Henry B. Gwynn, Louis G. Weller, Lieut. Comdr. Erik G. Hakansson and Hugh Davis.

Constantine Brown, foreign news commentator, addressed a luncheon meeting on current developments in the European capitals and Washington. An auxiliary feature of the opening day's program was a dinner given last night at the Mayflower, where all sessions are being held, by the Women's Medical Society, of which Dr. Elizabeth Chickering is president.

The concluding event today will be a public meeting in the grand ballroom of the Mayflower, at which Dr. James C. Sargent, past president of the Wisconsin State Medical Society, will speak on "This Is Our Oath." Dr. William J. Mallory, president of the District Medical Society, will preside.

Capital News In Brief

Technical Skill Takes Lead

Professional organizations depend increasly for leadership upon "men of technical skill rather than business ability," P. T. Llewellyn, research engineer of the United States Steel Corporation, last night told the Washington section of the American Welding Society.

Speaking at a meeting in the Lafayette Hotel, he pointed out that in recent years the organization has emphasized "regulatory rather than promotional functions and scientific rather than commercial activities."

Scott Given Farewell

Washington Chapter No. 1, National Association of Power Engineers, last night tendered a farewell party to R. S. Scott, who resigned his post as chief water inspector of the District, at Hall's Grill, Seventh and K streets southwest.

Scott, who came here two years ago from Galveston, Tex., will take a new position in Buffalo, N. Y. The chapter presented him with a wristwatch.

Theif Slashes Cabbie

Because he attempted to seize an auto thief last night, Frank Tapor, 33, of 807 Eighth street northwest, a cab driver, was in serious condition at Emergency Hospital.

Tapor cornered the thief in a Tenth street alley near Massachusetts avenue northwest. In a fight, the bandit drew a knife and slashed Tapor about the face. Although bystanders gave chase, the thief escaped after running into a Seventh street theater.

Performers Robbed

Mrs. Don Conrado and Harold Laugher, performers of the Johnny J. Jones Circus, were robbed of clothing and valuables as they performed their acts under the "big top" yesterday. Articles valued at $100 were stolen from Mrs. Conrado's automobile and Laugher's tent.

Engineer Burned

Frank X. Peale, of Capitol Heights, Md., assistant engineer at the Shoreham Hotel, was treated at Emergency Hospital yesterday for first and second degree burns of a leg, arm, and body after a boiler exploded as he cleaned it. Accumulated dust caused the explosion, police said. No one else was endangered, police reported.

Grocer Held Up

Two men last night held up and robbed Sam Cohen, grocer, of $25 at his store in the 1200 block Third street southwest. In the store at the time were also his wife, Emma, and a sister-in-law, Lillie Pevin.

Laws Speeds Up Warring's Third Trial

Mass of Reports Handed Directly To Jury Saving Several Hours

Justice Laws invoked streamlined procedure yesterday to speed the third Warring trial, in which Emmitt Warring, jailed boss of a $2,000,000 numbers racket is accused of criminal conspiracy.

A mass of reports, tax returns and bookkeeping data were handed directly to the jury, saving the several hours it would have taken to have nearly a dozen persons swear to the data, as was done in the previous trials, which ended without verdicts.

District Attorney Pine and Assistant District Attorney Wilson, for the Government, and Attorneys F. Joseph Donohue and Myron G. Ehrlich, for Warring, agreed to the step.

Justice Laws recently submitted to the District court his report of an exhaustive survey of pretrial agreements, by which undisputed matters are settled in a few minutes conference between lawyers instead of being wrangled over for days in court. He used one of the criminal provisions for the first time yesterday.

District Attorney Pine began yesterday's session with an outline of the Government's charges that the Warrings—Emmitt, Leo Paul and Charles (Rags)—conspired with Gordon L. R. Sadur, a tax consultant, to conceal profits of the $2,000,000-a-year Warring numbers racket. The others are not on trial with Emmitt, but will face the court later.

Pine outlined the criminal contempt proceedings, in which Emmitt was jailed for 26 months for jury fixing, and said this would be shown to show that Emmitt was laboring under a "consciousness of guilt."

Donahue moved for a mistrial, saying that Pine had failed to outline a criminal conspiracy case and that the remarks about the jury fixing went further than the law allowed.

Curran Addresses Colored Lawyers

Sponsored by the Washington Bar Association, composed of colored attorneys, a mental health symposium was held last night at Miner Teachers' College.

Human Nature Reveals Itself in 'Stagecoach'

Wanger Production Is Rousing Entertainment; Famous G-Man, Author Arrives Here Today; Midweek Notes of the Theater and Its People

CONTRARY TO THE IMPLICATION of the title, "Stagecoach" is not another "historical epic" of the Old West. It has the Old West as its background, to be sure, but in essence it is a composite of character studies concerning itself with the private lives of nine persons making a hazardous trip by stage through hostile Indian country. There is here something of the "Grand Hotel" motif adapted to the cramped confines of a six-horse stage, rattling its way across a picturesque Western country where savage Apaches presumably lurk behind every crag and every scrub growth of brush.

BELL

The story of "Stagecoach" was adapted from Ernest Haycox's "Stage to Lordsburg" by Dudley Nichols and was directed by John Ford, a combination that has contributed much to the eminence of the screen in the past. They have done another superlative job this time. "Stagecoach" unfolds a tale of unflagging interest, great excitement, deep human discernment and remarkably sustained suspense.

The nine passengers on the stage are an expectant mother, hastening to her army officer husband; a shady lady, who is an outcast from frontier respectability; a fabulous drunkard, who once was a fine doctor; a banker, spouting bromides and platitudes with a satchel on his lap containing $50,000 of stolen money; a mysterious gambler, with a punctilious chivalry toward ladies in distress; the Ringo Kid, a fugitive from justice, intent on wiping out an old grudge against the three Plummer boys; a timid little whiskey drummer, whose meek demeanor causes him to be called "Reverend" by all who meet him; the marshal, who is riding "shotgun" to protect the group from Indians and bandits, and the stage driver, principally perplexed by his considerable domestic difficulties.

There is never any intention on the part of this column to review a picture in advance, but it may not be going too far to say that the expectant mother has her baby en route, the Indians do attack and every opportunity is afforded for the divergent personalities aboard the coach to betray themselves for what they are. It is a fascinating study—not quite so far-flung as "Grand Hotel," but decidedly in the same genre.

There are no great stars of the present film firmament in "Stagecoach," but there are a group of extraordinarily competent actors who have been chosen with uncanny judgment for the effective exposition of their respective roles. The complete roster is too long for publication here and now, but among the principals are to be found such artists as Claire Trevor, John Wayne, Andy Devine, John Carradine, Thomas Mitchell, George Bancroft, Louise Platt, Donald Meek, Berton Churchill, Tim Holt, Francis Ford, Florence Lake, Walter McGrail, Paul McVey, Chris Martin and a long list of others.

If you have to know in advance who it is that "steals the picture," it is Thomas Mitchell, in the role of the bibbling doctor. Mr. Mitchell, distinguished author-actor-director that he is, had much the same sort of part in "Hurricane." It seems to be part of Mr. Mitchell's cinema fate to deliver a baby in every important picture in which he appears. He contributed a superfine performance to "Hurricane." He is even better in "Stagecoach"—which is as good as anyone can reasonably expect to be.

"Stagecoach" will be coming along to the screen at Loew's Palace Theater as soon as "Wuthering Heights" moves on. That will not be for a week or so yet. But when "Stagecoach" does put in its appearance, see it. Walter Wanger has gone to the front with this one.

Preceding the preview of "Stagecoach" yesterday afternoon, Master Ray Bell—no relation—the demon Loew publicist, on the verge of another prize trip to Europe, flashed "While America Sleeps" on the unsuspecting guys and gals of the press. This is another one of the "Crime Does Not Pay" series of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer short-reelers, but a little more important than the average run. It deals with the sinister business of foreign spying and sabotage and reveals the manner in which a pretty precious band of international crooks were apprehended by the operatives of the U. S. Intelligence Service. This subject is reputedly based on actual official records and is said to be no mere fictional creation of an imaginative mind. "While America Sleeps," as I understand it, has not as yet been released for national distribution. When it is, I exhort every American to see it, too.

There is, of course, no end to this "continuous round of pleasure" that constitutes the life of an occupant of a drama desk. There is the slightly complicating consideration that has to do with an attempted determination of when we might get a little work done, but that is a minor matter.

What I mean is that today at 1, Manager Hardie Meakin, of RKO-Keith's, is screening "The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle," costarring Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, and at 4 p. m., the Loew executives are tossing a soiree in honor of Jessica Dragonette in the Garbo Room of the Shoreham. It will be a close squeak, getting them both in, but it will be done, so help me and three others.

In addition to the representatives of the press, Miss Dragonette will be pestered this afternoon by a distinguished coterie of music lovers, professional musicians, radio executives and the heads of various local organizations whose activities ally themselves more or less with those of the brilliant diva in whose honor the party is being given.

Miss Dragonette will make her first headline appearance in vaudeville at Loew's Capitol Theater on Friday, following a career already made brilliant by her work over the airwaves and on the concert stage.

Leon G. Turrou, former G-Man, who cracked the Nazi spy ring in New York last fall, will arrive in Washington this evening by plane from Cleveland to address a joint meeting of the Kiwanis clubs of Washington and Baltimore at the Mayflower Hotel in this city tomorrow. It is upon his book, "Nazi Spies in America," that the Warner Brothers' screen production of "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" is based. The picture stars Edward G. Robinson, with Francis Lederer, Paul Lukas, George Sanders and others as members of the spy ring. "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" will be shown on the screen at the Earle in due course.

Call-of-the-Open-Road-Note

That old team of Oscar and Etheldreda—roadside acrobats who used to make their jumps in a motor car—having been disrupted by Oscar's death in Europe a couple of years ago, Etheldreda now has a new partner. The act will be coming along to your neighborhood any day now. Watch for it.

Youths To Fill Ranks of Stars

The wheel of fortune spins again. With a definite dearth of leading men—and the same old need for feminine reservists—Hollywood today is in the midst of a planned campaign to find and develop new talent this season.

Paramount alone has already signed 12 youngsters, hoping to find star material among them. And the studio's talent scouts are out looking for more.

Found on the stage of Pasadena Community Playhouse, a Gable-esque young man named Robert Preston was entrusted with an important part in Cecil B. De Mille's "Union Pacific," and immediately afterward was cast as one of the three brothers of "Beau Geste," with Gary Cooper and Ray Milland. Paramount is convinced he will become important "box office."

From New York

Betty Field has been brought from the New York stage production of "What a Life" to do her same role in the screen version, with Jackie Cooper cast opposite. In the same picture are two more newcomers—Janice Logan, daughter of a Chicago investment broker, and Janet Waldo, former University of Washington coed.

Regarded as important also is Patricia Morison, a lissome brunette, also brought from the New York stage. She has the feminine lead in "The Magnificent Fraud," with Lloyd Nolan and Akim Tamiroff.

Ellen Drew, the former dime store girl, who clicked in a secondary role of Frank Lloyd's "If I Were King" last year, will be seen next as George Raft's heart interest in "The Ladys' From Kentucky."

"Venus" on List

Judith Barrett, the "Venus from Venus, Tex.," is featured with Bob Burns in "I'm From Missouri."

Joseph Allen, a young stage actor, son of Joe Allen, veteran Broadway star, gets an important spot in the next Burns picture, "Our Leading Citizen."

And William Henry, who has grown up in the movies, like Mickey Rooney, gets a break as a romantic lead in "Geronimo," story of the campaign against the Apache war lord who terrorized the Southwest for ten years a generation ago.

Actor Baffled by Complex Dialogue

Ever since the introduction of talking pictures, actors have complained about some of the difficult dialogue concocted for them by Hollywood's army of scriveners.

Melville Cooper, however, proves an exception. It's not the difficult dialogue which bothers him, but the easy lines. For instance, in a scene with Douglas Fairbanks, jr., for Universal's "The Sun Never Sets," one of the actor's lines was, "And I was forgetting Aedes aegypti, stegomyia fasciatia, or the tiger mosquito."

Cooper got through the Latin part all right, but apparently that taxed his memory to the limit, because he could not remember what followed. So he read the line, "And I was forgetting the Aedes aegypti, stegomyia fasciatia—or a Turkish lullaby."

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., April 25.—A Boston doctor gave the ladies of his community the wrong dope when he told them Hollywood is full of eligible men. Why, they have all been gobbled up like this year's freshmen gulp goldfish. Don't take my word for it, get a load of this list, all enjoying more or less connubial bliss: Clark Gable, Erroll Flynn, Spencer Tracy, Francis Lederer, Nelson Eddy, Fred Astaire, Roland Colman, Jimmy Cagney, John Payne, Ray Milland, Joel McCrea, John Wayne, Leslie Howard, Don Ameche, Dick Arlen, Chester Morris, Gene Autry, Charles Boyer, Basil Rathbone, Laurence Olivier, Bill Boyd, Henry Fonda, Gary Cooper, and even our two horror men, Karloff and Lugosi.

HOPPER

In fine-combing the list, I find only Jimmie Stewart, Edgar Bergen, Brian Aherne, Robert Preston, Cesar Romero and John Howard—our only real bachelors.

Rudy Vallee and Bill Powell are eligible, but they've both been tried. Bill twice.

Our fair ladies haven't been too smart. They let a little French girl steal Ty Power right under their noses and—an Eastern divorcee get young Doug. Same thing happened to Henry Fonda while he was making a picture in England. And you all remember how Sandra Balfe came to snare Gary Cooper—and did! She arrived here complete with her old nurse and a dog, got herself a job and hooked our most eligible bachelor of that year.

Helen Morgan's back in town misting eyes with her torch songs. A few years ago, before amputating her current husband, the late Lowell Sherman had a grand idea for her—"Camille"—with songs thrown in. But her mate, with an eye to business, asked $50,000. Which extinguished the torch.

Eddie Sutherland insists our charm bracelets are just a step removed from the cave and jungle belles, who used to wear tiger claws and elephant tusks.

Claude Binyon, who's polishing up "Arizona"—the picture, silly—says he discovered the Apache Indians were far more polite than whites gave them credit for. They never scalped or fought by night. A warrior deserved to keep his hair if he fought fair in the daylight. Night brought on evil spirits.

Salt Lake's putting its welcome mat in front of the famous tabernacle on the twenty-eighth, when Jeanette MacDonald sings there. At least a dozen of her friends will fly on for the event. I didn't know outsiders were allowed to sing there, but it's their biggest auditorium and the whole town's excited about it.

Director Sam Wood, who used to be a middleweight champion, says he gets perfect relaxation when he lies flat on his back on the floor. No matter how tired, it snaps his mind right back into action. He's sending a detailed account of his exercise to Washington.

The keynote of Warner's party for Mae Robson was in good taste. Carrying out her favorite flower and color scheme, they brought truckloads of lilacs from the Ojai Valley.

It was Mae's day. Even the stars who attended sat back against the wall, and in no way intruded into her spotlight. When an old boy came up to congratulate her and said, "You don't remember me, but we played together in 'Over the Hills,'" Mae looked a little surprised and said, "Oh, yes." When he'd gone she said, "You know, Hedda, he thinks I'm Mrs. Stuart Robson, and why spoil his memories?"

I know just how she felt. I've had people rush up to me and say, "How do you do it? You don't look 65." They thought I was Edna Wallace.

When a studio takes time out of a working day, which costs money, to honor a 75-year-old lady, then you know the picture business is growing up.

Nice to see the whole Irvin Cobb clan. Mrs. Cobb's knee deep in gardening again.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, April 25 (INS).—I wasn't really surprised today when I heard that Henry Fonda was staying on at Twentieth-Century-Fox. I knew that Darryl Zanuck was delighted with "Young Mr. Lincoln," and it seemed the most natural thing in the world that Henry and John Ford, the director, should again be teamed. But I was surprised that "Drums Along the Mohawk," Walter G. Edmonds' best seller, had been chosen to co-star Henry and Nancy Kelly in an important Technicolor movie with John doing the megaphoning.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Surprised because Darryl bought "Drums" all of two years ago, after every studio in the business bid for it, and then for some reason never filmed it. It's perfect now for the current market, dealing, as it does, with the revolutionary period and featuring two lovers of those pioneering days.

I don't remember in my many years of reporting any two writers being paid the sum of $40,000 for an original. Yet that's what Delmar Daves and Irving Fineman received from David Loew for "Lovers Must Learn." I imagine the reason for this sizable amount was because Delmar had co-authored "Love Affair," the Irene Dunne-Charles Boyer romantic comedy which has done remarkable business. Young Loew will have to go out and get the heroine who travels to Paris in the story and has herself a time. He has no stars under personal contract but perhaps he will find help on the United Artists lot. This, by the way, will be one of his first U. A. productions.

Sacha Guitry's "The Illusionist" is being whipped into shape by Gene Towne and Graham Baker for Walter Wanger, who plans to get it on the screen without delay. Walter will borrow David Niven from Samuel Goldwyn for the lead and it's a nice break for Davey who, until "Dawn Patrol" was just a bit player. Of course "Wuthering Heights" didn't do him any harm, for he proved that he could play heavy drama as well as light comedy with which he has heretofore been associated. Davey comes in on the crest of the vogue for new faces, for although he has been here a long time he is only now knocking at the door of stardom.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Johnny Weissmuller and his manager, Bo Roos, flew to New York tonight to confer with Billy Rose about Johnee's swimming act; George Raft and his famous bodyguard, "The Killer" (Mack Gray to you), heading for the Kentucky Derby. There's a wager on among George's pals and Virginia Peine's friends that these two will kiss and make up ere long; Frank Parker and Mitzi Green will officially declare their intention to wed when he joins her in New York next week; Cesar Romero and Ann Sheridan pleased the photographers and Warner Brothers, too, by attending the "Juarez" premiere together this eve; Dorothy Lamour and Wynn Rocamora, now getting to be a constant twosome, at the Cafe Lamaze; maybe Tom Brown and Natalie Draper are still unreconciled, but they certainly didn't act it at the Grace Hayes lodge.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

With Shirley Povich

Boston, April 25.—This is the last stronghold of the ancient, if ignoble, business of wrestling. In Boston, the peripatetic pachyderms still do very well for themselves, for some reason. The old game is gasping in every other sector, but the grunting gang can average $6,000 at the gate any time they perform in Boston.

POVICH

It's not surprising. Wrestling's revival was staged here in Boston back in 1928 when Gus Sonnenberg came out of Dartmouth College to sink his head into the ample tummy of Strangler Lewis, flooring him with a flying tackle and winning the best-recognized of all the world titles. That bout set a new modern record for wrestling gates, drawing $72,000.

Sonnenberg's success started a terrific influx of former college football players into the sport. Ed Don George was an early recruit, and then came Jim McMillan, who used to run interference for Red Grange; Joe Savoldi, the Notre Damer; Al Morelli, of Boston College, and Century Milstead out of Yale. Heft and brawn that stood them so well on the football field could be translated into ready money during the rassling renaissance.

Literally, that crew put wrestling on its feet, whooping up a game that had suffered from too much science of the old tug-and-pull rasslers whose idea of terrific action was going to the mat at the outset and breathing heavily with an occasional grunt and grimace. They put wrestling on its feet by wrestling on their feet, making it a stand-up contest.

So They Rewrote the Rules

Of course they were all phoneys, as wrestlers. Their flying tackles, technically, were against all the rules of wrestling, and so were their so-called drop-kick holds which consisted chiefly of booting the other guy on the chin. But smart promoters were quick to see that the crowds liked it, and they blandly re-wrote the wrestling rules to give the crowd what they liked. And wrestling prospered.

Wrestling always prospers when boxing goes into a depression. And it was in 1928 when the colorless Gene Tunney was holding the heavyweight title that boxing went into a sad decline. The Nation was wrestling-crazy and Jim Londos, working every night in the week, could make as much as $800,000 a year. Most any sort of a wrestler could make $25,000.

But with the arrival of the spectacular Joe Louis on the boxing scene, the fight industry witnessed a revival of its own. And wrestling correspondingly went into a decline. The folks were tiring, too, of the college boys, and the plethora of half-breed Indians, Terrible Turks and Ali Babas who said they were wrestlers but were merely ham actors.

Boston alone weathered the wrestling depression. Up here the promoters did it by introducing a new cycle. They capitalized on Boston's Irish population by featuring a succession of big, brawny boys from Old Erin, giving them fake titles and maneuvering them into big matches.

Danno O'Mahoney was the medium of the biggest play for Boston's wrestling interest. Paul Bowser, the No. 1 promoter here, drummed up a story that O'Mahoney was the champion of Europe, and sure enough matched him with Strangler Lewis. In that bout, O'Mahoney pinned Lewis, a startling reversal of form inasmuch as Lewis used to throw Danno just for practice on a tour to Europe the summer before. But the promoters couldn't use Lewis. They could use O'Mahoney and it was important to them that Danno should win.

Shikat Won't Play Ball

Danno didn't lose a match in Boston, and they sent him West to capitalize on his newly-acquired fame. That was a mistake. They matched him in the West with Dick Shikat, an aging ex-champ, and Shikat pulled the double cross. He didn't lose to O'Mahoney. What he did do was half kill the Irishman, who, in fact, couldn't wrestle as well as your Aunt Katherine. O'Mahoney married a Boston nurse and quit the game.

The Irish angle worked out so nicely for the Boston promoters that they didn't drop it. They imported one Crusher Casey, another son of the Ould Sod. And then they imported Crusher's brothers, Tom and Jim, and they are still doing very well. Even Sonnenberg is back in Boston wrestling rings. The big $50,000 gates are passe, but the wrestler lucky enough to get top booking in Boston's weekly shows can make himself a couple of grand of an evening.

With CONSIDINE

New York, April 25.—The never-too-rational boxing game hits a new peak tomorrow when Lou Nova departs for Nyack, N. Y., where he will go in training for his Max Baer fight at the estate of Dr. Pierre Bernard, the former Chicago barber who founded a profitable love-cult and headed the enterprise under the name of "Oom the Omnipotent."

CONSIDINE

Nova's departure for Oom's mystic acres, where some of society's leading figures once paraded scantily clad through incense-laden rooms, comes on the heels of disquieting information that Max Baer is taking regular psychiatric treatments.

A prominent New York doctor visited Baer at Grossinger's upstate resort over the past week-end and decided, after studying the battler, that Max was suffering from a complex that made him fearful that too many punches would mar his beauty. To eradicate this fault, the doctor has not attacked Max's theatrical aspirations. He has only redirected them. He has convinced Max that he is the logical successor to the late Lou Wolheim—the "heavy" whose mashed face could scare a Flatbush shopper away from a bargain counter.

Real Gorilla in Nova's Camp

"I could play that fellow's parts," Max breathed heavily, after a treatment last Sunday. His secret ambition to be another Tyrone Power seemed completely gone, and he looked forward eagerly to offering his face to the reconstructing pokes of his next opponent. But the doctor will return this coming week-end for another treatment, to guard against any malignant regrowth of the power complex.

If possible, Nova's camp is going to be even quainter. Baer will have the usual quota of gorillas for sparring partners—indeed Mushky Jackson, who rounds up such bums, was prowling through the local gyms today, equipped with a handful of carrots and a noose. But Nova is going to have a real honest-to-Ringling gorilla with him. Dr. Bernard is a lover of animals, too, and he has stocked his sumptuous estate with a gorilla the size of Gargantua, several ceremonial elephants, a few performing tigers, a colony of white parrots, a family of lions and dozens of monkeys. No one has approached the gorilla with a view to signing him up as a Nova sparmate. In fact, no one has approached the gorilla. Frank Buck will use Dr. Bernard's tigers in his World Fair jungle.

Bernard has been many things since he deserted the shaving mugs for more ephemeral pursuits. Somewhere along the line he came up with his love-cult idea. His members signed up by dipping pens in their own blood. He called himself the Loving Garu and apparently he made a distinguished figure in his exotic robes and bald head, because he got some pretty good clients.

Mrs. Barbara Rutherford Hatch Nichols, daughter of Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, married one of Oom's confederates in 1924 at the strange eyrie overlooking the Hudson River. Mrs. Ogden L. Mills married Sir Paul Dukes, of the British intelligence office, there. A fashionable Pittsburgh broker named Frederick G. Kay remarried his wife at an exotic ceremony wherein the "bride" and "groom" was carried up to Oom's dais in coffins, while a group of Nubians direct from Lenox avenue, New York, pounded on tom toms.

Estimated Cost of $1,000,000

In 1931 Bernard—who is now a disciple of Yogi-ism and very well thought of in that baffling calling—built an "affection palace" at an estimated cost of $1,000,000. In the same year he became president of the State bank of Pearl River, N. Y., at which time it developed that his name in the old chin-lathering days was Pete Coon. He became a pilot about the same time, and got into a little trouble with his swank neighbors, who claimed that the roar of his plane engine dried up their cows.

Oom is remarkably preserved for his 60-odd years and he plans to accompany Nova on many of the fighter's morning marathons. He is an expert all around athlete and once picked up small change as a ball player.

Oom last came into the news when it was thought, for a time, that the mad sculptor, Irwin, was hiding on the estate, after he killed a model named Ronnie Gedeon and a couple of others.

Oom apparently has interested himself only in Yogi-ism since then, and the days when he was host to an eccentric congregation that included some of the social register's leading lights, as well as rheumatic old Daddy Browning, are hardly remembered.

Nova's manager, Ray Carlen, was surprised that Dr. Bernard accepted Nova. The manager, who is a lot more level-headed than you'd suspect, believes the empire of Oom is an ideal place for a fighter to train. And we have seen too many screwy things in boxing to doubt him.

Ambers Kayoes Honey Mellody In Fourth Round

By the Associated Press.

Boston, April 25.—Lou Ambers, the Herkimer, N. Y., hurricane, knocked out Honey Mellody, of Boston, New England lightweight titlist, in the fourth round of their scheduled 10-round feature tonight in the Boston Garden. Ambers weighed 137½ and Mellody 133.

Hughes Quits As Gallaudet Athletic Head

Prof. F. H. Hughes, known in local sporting circles as "Teddy," has resigned his position as director of athletics at Gallaudet College, it was revealed last night.

Hughes quit the job he has held for more than 20 years at the twenty-ninth annual Athletic Association banquet Saturday night.

Johnstown Sets Record in Race at Jamaica

Derby Hope Near New U. S. Mark

William Woodward Entry Covers Mile, 70 Yards in 1:40 4-5 At New York Track

Jamaica Race Track, N. Y., April 25 (AP).—Establishing himself more firmly than ever as advance favorite for the Kentucky Derby, William Woodward's Johnstown today came within one-fifth of a second of the American record for a mile and 70 yards while scoring a hollow victory over three rivals in the Woodhaven Purse. The Paumonok Handicap winner galloped to the wire under triple wraps in 1:40 4-5, carrying top weight of 120 pounds, and registered by five lengths. The bay son of Jamestown, a 1-to-3 favorite, broke in front and never was out of restraint.

Mrs. F. A. Ambrose Clark's Lovely Night, a recent winner here, earned the place by six lengths over G. D. Widener's Preakness candidate, Eight Thirty, second choice in today's event at 4 to 1. War Moon was a beaten-off last.

Before the event Johnstown was held at 9 to 2 for the Derby. His odds are certain to take another drop after the brilliant, streamlined performance this afternoon. The American record of 1:40 3-5 for a mile and 70 yards is held jointly by Mike Hall and Chasar. Mike Hall, as a 3-year-old, made the mark in 1927 at Latonia, but under a mere 103 pounds. Chasar, as a 4-year-old in 1935, and carrying only 104 pounds, equalled the record at the Coney Island track, Cincinnati. Johnstown's race, therefore, sizes up as a truly remarkable achievement. He could have tied or equalled the record if asked for more speed by Jimmy Stout.

As it was, Johnstown had to be content with breaking Sting's track record of 1:41 1-5. He sped the 6 furlongs in 1:11 3-5 and the mile in 1:37 flat.

Campbell Hits Two Homers as Tribe Wins, 7-1

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, April 25.—It yas no mistake when Cleveland's manager, Oscar Vitt, shoved Bruce Campbell into the Cleveland outfield today for Earl Averill, who hasn't been hitting his weight. Campbell connected for two circuit blows, good for five runs, to lead the Indians to a 7-1 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

Bob Feller evened the series by hurling four-hit ball under gloomy skies for his second triumph of the campaign in as many starts. He fanned nine batters, setting the White Sox down in order on strikes in the first and third innings. The Iowa farm boy gave only three walks.

Yanks Swamp A's, 8-4, With 13-Hit Attack

Selkirk Homers, Drives in 4 Runs; Ruffing, Hadley Hurl

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 25.—The Yankees celebrated the announcement of Joe DiMaggio's engagement today by belting three pitchers for 13 hits and an 8-to-4 victory over the Philadelphia Athletics.

With big Red Ruffing and Bump Hadley splitting an eight-hit hurling performance, the Yankee big guns went to work on Bud Thomas, Edgar Smith and "Line Drive" Nelson. George Selkirk paced the attack, collecting a homer and two singles and driving in four runs.

Nick Etten whacked a homer for the A's with a mate aboard off Hadley in the sixth, after Ruffing had retired because of a pulled muscle in his pitching arm. Ruffing gave up the other two Athletics runs on three hits in the fourth.

The Yanks were without the services of second-sacker Joe Gordon, but they didn't need him. DiMaggio's double, a grounder and a sacrifice fly netted the first run in the third inning. In the fourth, four more poured across as Skeeter Newsome's error was followed by singles by Lou Gehrig and Bill Dickey, Selkirk's homer and a base hit by Ruffing.

DOROTHY ARNOLD AND DiMAGGIO

N. Y. Slugger Say He Will Marry Dorothy Arnold After World Series

International News Service

New York, April 25.—Joe DiMaggio, lanky wizard of the baseball diamond, couldn't keep his secret any longer and today at the Yankee Stadium he took time off to admit that he is going to be married. The girl is the blonde screen, nightclub and radio singer, Dorothy Arnold.

"Yeah," said the sleek-haired San Franciscan, "there isn't any official announcement as yet and we don't know exactly when we'll get married but probably not until after the world series."

Joe met Miss Arnold two years ago when she was entertaining in a New York night club.

In Hollywood, Miss Arnold, too, admitted the engagement.

"We're going to have a quiet wedding," she said. "It might even be this summer but our honeymoon will be postponed until the close of the baseball season."

Joe is 24, and was born in Martinez, Calif. Later the family moved to San Francisco. Joe's father is a fisherman and Joe owns a fish grotto in San Francisco. He joined the Yanks in 1936, breaking into baseball in 1932 when he immediately showed he was "a natural."

Miss Arnold is 19 and was born in Duluth. She has appeared in "The Storm," "Secret of a Nurse," "Code of the Streets" and "House of Fear."

Whizzer White May Quit Oxford, Play Pro Football

Pittsburgh, April 25 (U.P.).—Unsettled conditions in Europe may cause Whizzer White to give up his Rhodes scholarship at Oxford and return to professional football this fall, according to Art Rooney, president of the Pittsburgh club.

WHITE

White received $15,000 last season for playing in the Pittsburgh backfield.

"We have just heard from White," Rooney said. "In fact, he has been in communication with us rather frequently of late. The Whizzer has not decided what he intends to do. But should present European conditions continue, I am fairly certain White will be with us next season."

Romo Drops Close Verdict To Eddie Alzek

Spaniard's Hopes of Bout With Ambers Fade, 600 See Card

Any hopes Chico Romo, fighting out of Philadelphia, might have had for a bout with Lou Ambers, former lightweight champion, this summer at Griffith Stadium, were blasted last night at Turner's Arena by Eddie Alzek, of New York, who took a close decision over the Spanish stablemate of Mexican Joe Silva.

Chico, at 134, was clearly outboxed by the cagier Alzek and took a lot of punishment in the clinches. Decision of the judges was unanimous. The Post score sheet gave Alzek the fight by one hard-fought round.

The Romo-Alzek fight, headlining a card featuring three eight-rounders, had been billed as a bout to pick an opponent for Ambers this summer. Less than 600 fans turned out.

In the first two rounds, Alzek made Chico look foolish in the infighting, snapping his head back several times with short uppercuts. Chico, shooting a long lightning-like jab, made it uncomfortable for the New Yorker and opened a cut high on his cheek bone.

Trailing badly, Romo came out in the eighth, his arms flailing windmill fashion. He planted two hard rights in Eddie's midsection but missed twice that many. Neither boy was impressive, and Promoter Joe Turner's paying guests left the arena with a grouch.

One Small Galento

Comedy was lent to the evening's program by the eight-rounder preceding the main bout in which Red Lewis, 169½, of Richmond, was given a unanimous decision over a newcomer, George Zamaris, 175½, hailing from Tony Galento's Orange, N. J., haunts.

Appearing as a small edition of "Two-Ton Toney," George gave a nice exhibition of bull-like rushes backward and forward across the ring, occasionally landing a blow that rocked Lewis. The Richmond boy, however, laughed throughout the match. In the third round he cut Zamaris under the right eye with a whistling left hook.

See-Saw Battle Won By Boston

Red Sox Knot Game in Ninth; Krakky's Wildness Important Factor

By Shirley Povich.

Boston, Mass., April 25.—For ten innings this afternoon, Joe Krakauskas was getting no worse than a draw with the Boston Red Sox—and then James E. Foxx, this generation's Boston strong boy, flogged him into a 6-to-5 defeat.

Krakauskas unloosed a high fast ball toward the plate in the eleventh inning and was not long in realizing his mistake—no longer, at least than it required Jimmy Foxx's second home-run of the season to disappear over the left field wall, carrying with it disaster for the Nats.

It was no bunt. It wasn't a cheap Fenway Park homer. It was a magnificent clout. It cleared the 40 foot fence while still on the rise. It cleared the screen atop the fence and it cleared Lansdowne street across the way, coming to rest finally on a neighborhood rooftop.

But there might have been no eleventh inning, save for Krakauskas' wildness. Ten bases on balls he issued to Boston this chilly afternoon and it was his tenth base on balls, in the ninth inning, that helped to reprieve the Red Sox who shoved over a run in that ninth to tie the score at 5-5.

Heving Saves Game

Foxx won the game for the Red Sox, but Joe Heving was the fellow who saved it for 'em. Heving, the fourth pitcher sent to the mound by Joe Cronin today, held the Nats at bay after Fred Ostermueller, Woodrow Rich and Emerson Dickman had been pounded out of the box. Heving, pitching the ninth, tenth and eleventh innings, brought the Nats up sharply, permitting only one hit—Travis' infield single in the eleventh.

It was something of a pitching duel between Krakauskas and Ostermueller until the sixth inning, with the Nats holding a 2-1 lead, but that sixth saw the Nats come up with some bush-league baseball that enabled the Sox to score three runs and go to the front, 4-2.

Krakky inspired the Red Sox rally by walking Cronin, the first man to face him, and then, with one out, Taft Wright muffed Williams' single on the bounce. It was the first of three Washington errors during the session. At this point, Doerr walked to fill the bases, and then a mishandled squeeez play netted the Sox two runs.

Krakky Surprised

Desautels' bunt took Krakauskas by surprise to the extent that he finally tossed it wide to first base, and both Cronin and Williams scored. And a bit later, Cecil Travis contributed the third error of the inning—a fumble of Pinch Hitter Gaffke's grounder that let in the third Boston run of the inning.

Against Woodrow Rich in the seventh, the Nats promptly tied the score at 4-4, after filling the bases with none out on walks to Case and Sammy West which sandwiched Gelbert's single. Taft Wright drove in the first run with a long sacrifice fly to Cramer and Buddy Myer drove in the second run with a single to center. That blow drove Rich to cover and with men on first and third and only one out, Emerson Dickman halted the uprising.

Dickman yielded the Nats a run in the eighth, though. They got it on a pass to Ferrell, and singled by Charley Gelbert and Sammy West, and went into a 5-4 lead. But in the ninth they failed to add what would have been the winning run after Myer led off the inning with a walk from Heving and stole second with

Rozzelle Hurls Well For Winners

Settles Down After Bad First Inning; Nance, Raider Ace, Charged With Loss

By Bill Burnett

The confidence which has fairly oozed from Central High baseball players during the training period was given solid backing yesterday at Central Stadium when the lads of Mt. Pleasant overcame Western's 3-0 first-inning lead to win, 9-3. It was the only interhigh game of the day, and the handful of spectators left the stands well satisfied.

There was a short time, however, when Central's chances of starting its West Division race with a victory were dark, indeed. Dick Rozzelle, tiny veteran of the Blue, started his mound work by issuing a walk to Western's Joe Withers, and a pair of hits immediately put the Raiders in the lead. Outfielder Leach accounted for two of the tallies with a rousing triple that hit the flagpole in centerfield, and he later came in on an infield out.

Despite that erratic first, however, Rozzelle settled down to pitch the full nine innings and hand out but seven hits. As he gradually warmed up, more and more batters swung futilely at his slants and went to the bench hitless. He checked in nine strikeouts and gave only three walks.

The brilliant hurling that Carmel Nance, of the Raiders, has been turning in regularly in warm-up games was considerably marred by his performance yesterday, but he was still the headiest man in Western's lineup. He allowed 11 hits, four of them for extra bases, but was almost as good as Rozzelle in strikeouts, with eight. In contrast to his usual stinginess, he gave up six charity bases.

Beyond the fact that his team wasn't hitting behind him, Nance had a number of disastrous fielding errors to blame for the width of the final margin.

'Popeye' Ate All His Spinach, Now He's Senation of 3-Yr.-Olds

GILDED "POPEYE" KNIGHT

Kilded Knight Surprised Everyone —Except His Trainer, Jim Fitzsimmons

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 25.—So "Popeye" ate up all his pinach and "growed strong" over the winter, and now he's the early sensation of this 3-year-old racing campaign.

In case you haven't caught on, "Popeye" is the stableboy's nickname for Gilded Knight, the Sir Galahad III colt which skyrocketed to the forefront of the spring gallopers by nipping El Chico in one outing and then giving a sound whipping to Challedon, Impound, Volitant, Porter's Mite and a few other well-liked steppers in the Chesapeake Stakes last Saturday.

You could have knocked down pretty nearly every one of the racing fans from here to Louisville with a whisper when this nicely setup bay colt from the Wheatley Stables came to the races as he did. But not so Sunny Jim Fitzsimmons, "Popeye's" trainer.

"Of course," Sunny Jim confessed today, "we were surprised when he beat Chico his first time out. Who wouldn't be? The Ziegler colt had won seven straight last year, and Gilded Knight took only two.

"But he's a good horse and came on well in the late campaigning last year. So when we sent him to the Chesapeake, we knew it was going to take a lot of running to whip him."

He's a fine looking piece of horseflesh is the Knight, very well bred. He's not big, but has well-developed shoulders and a ground-gaining stride, and is as easy to handle as a kid with a piece of candy.

"All Jockey Donoso had to do at Havre last Saturday," one stableboy said, "was hit him with the bat once when he made his bid rounding the turn, and this fellow just jumped out like he was never going to stop. Yep, he'll run all day if you ask him."

Browns Beat Detroit, 7-2

Detroit, April 25 (AP).—John Kramer, 21-year-old rookie right hander, limited the Detroit Tigers to six scattered hits today as he won his major league debut for the St. Louis Browns, 7 to 2.

Detroit converted a single by Barney McCosky and a triple by Fred Walker into two runs in the opening inning but thereafter Kramer was in complete command.

Paul (Dizzy) Trout, Tiger rookie, held the Browns hitless in the first three innings but blew up in the fourth when St. Louis scored four runs on six hits. George Gill allowed the rest of the St. Louis runs in the fifth before retiring in favor of Japhet Lynn, who subdued the Browns the rest of the way. St. Louis collected 12 hits.

Cubs Defeat Pirates, 5 to 3, Behind Lee

Chicago's Third Straight Victory; Bill's 2d Triumph

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 25.—The Chicago Cubs clung to their league leadership today when Bill Lee pitched them to a 5 to 3 victory over Pittsburgh to win his second triumph of the National League season.

The Cubs piled on Truett Sewell and Bill Swift for ten hits while Lee limited the Bucs to but eight.

Billy Herman drove in three of the Chicago runs with a walk, a single and a double. But it remained for Stanley Hack to again pace the Cub attack with a triple, a double and single.

Lee was untouchable except in the first and eighth innings. In the first the Bucs counted a run on singles by Paul Waner and Johnny Rizzo, Arky Vaughan's walk and Gus Suhr's sacrifice fly. In the eighth they got their two other runs on Heinie Manush's walk, Rizzo's double and Vaughan's single.

The Cubs started their attack in the third when Hack doubled and Herman singled to give them their first run. In the fourth they added two more runs on Gus Mancuso's double, singles by Dick Bartell, Hack and Jim Gleeson, and Herman's walk. This was the inning which saw the departure of Sewell.

In the sixth the Cubs got another run on Phil Cavarretta's walk, Mancuso's single and Bartell's sacrifice fly. Hack's triple and Herman's double gave the Cubs their fifth and final run in the seventh.

Roosevelt High Wins, 8-3, Over Anacostia Nine

Comparative strength of contenders in the East and West sections of the interhigh baseball series was furnished yesterday at Roosevelt Stadium, where the defending Riders battered out an 8 to 3 triumph over Anacostia's Indians. The game was not a series clash. Both teams won their opening interhigh engagements last week.

Big Eddie Vermillion, who was credited with Roosevelt's series victory, did not start yesterday, but got in for the last four innings in which he gave up only two hits. Babe Miklejohn started the game and went the first five stanzas with only four hits and three runs charged against him.

Once again it was a first inning blast that won for Roosevelt. Just as in their interhigh game, the Riders smashed out three runs in the first to tie things up and coast in. The Indians, however, also had a profitable batting session in the first, a brace of singles by Bob Gordon and Johnny Placos, and a free pass to Art Faircloth, being responsible. It was Gordon who punched out another single in the fifth to score Anacostia's only other tally. Roosevelt continued adding to its advantage with one run in the second, two in the third and one in both the fifth and seventh. Art Faircloth and Jack Burroughs were charged with 13 hits between them.

Baxter, who Turner's underlings insist parted with four of his front teeth just to lend him a vicious appearance in the ring, will replace Chief Chewaki in the semiwindup bout preceding the second tussle between The Terror and Hader, both of whom have failed to live up to their promises to tear the other to pieces.

Philadelphia, April 25.—The Philadelphia Phillies today pounded out 12 hits off Cliff Melton, Bill Lohrman and Walter Brown and won their fourth straight game, making it two in a row over the New York Giants, 8 to 1.

Claude Passau held the Giants to five hits into the ninth inning, then was relieved by Jim Henry when he walked the first two batters to face him. Henry promptly squelched the Giants by retiring three men in a row.

The Heurich Brewers got revenge yesterday for an early season defeat by George Washington University's freshmen, blasting three G. W. pitchers to beat the Colonial cubs, 9 to 1, in a five-inning game.

The Brewers pounded Toby Bright for four runs in the first inning and came back in the third for four more off Lefty Kushman. The final run was scored off Jack Mallus.

Krakauskas asked for it in the ninth by walking Jimmy Foxx and Joe Cronin before anybody was out, and then Tabor lashed a single past Gelbert that scored Foxx from second and the tying run with men on first and second and none as yet out, the Red Sox were entertaining notions of winning the ball game at this point, but Charley Gelbert stayed 'em with a diving, one-hand catch of Williams' pop bunt and a throw to Bluege that doubled Tabor off the bag.

Baering Down

By Arthur "Bugs" Baer.

While prosperity is leading a healthy outdoor life around the corner we are considering presidential candidates predated as of 1940.

There was a time when the country needed a strong silent man. But after listening to the squawks, recriminations and complaints we realized that a man now needs a strong, silent country.

There are many good men who can do the job. But we never really believe in the ability of a rain maker until he is drowned.

Man of the Month

(Following each game by The Washington Club, Walter Johnson distributes among the Nats ten points of merit, based on their performances for the day. At the end of each month, the Washington player boasting the greatest number of points is designated as the Nats' "Man of the Month" and receives a trophy from The Washington Post.)

By Walter Johnson,
(WJSV-General Mills Broadcaster.)

Charley Gelbert was the outstanding performer for the Nats yesterday at Boston and to him goes the bulk of the latest award of points in the Man of the Month contest.

To Gelbert, three points, because he had a hand in three Washington runs with his seventh and eighth inning singles, and because his play on Williams' bunt in the ninth was the fielding feature of the game.

To Buddy Myer, two points, because in the eighth inning he drove in the tying run for the Nats with a single to center.

To Sammy West, two points, because in the ninth inning his single put the Nats in a 5-4 lead.

To George Case, two points, because he rapped out a single and a double, scored two runs and drove in another.

BRADY

More college chatter—Jim Brady, Georgetown's former Golden Gloves light heavyweight champion, gives promise of developing into a good javelin thrower, according to advice from the Hilltop . . . Brady, a heavy shouldered lad of about 185 pounds, has been practicing only a few days, but belies his inexperience with good form and lengthy heaves . . . Don Martin, No. 1 man on the Georgetown freshman tennis team, was the seventh ranking national interscholastic player last season . . . Hank Bertrand, promising Hoya pitcher who dropped out of school last spring, is at St. Lawrence and will play varsity baseball for that college next year.

An early canvass of opinion among college baseball followers indicates that the best-liked young players in the District are George Pajak and Joe McFadden, third baseman and outfielder of Georgetown, and Shered Robertson and Hugh Keller, third baseman and outfielder of Maryland . . . Robertson, a nephew of Clark Griffith and an all-high selection at Roosevelt last season, has lost considerable ground to Pajak recently because he has been troubled with a back injury received playing touch football.

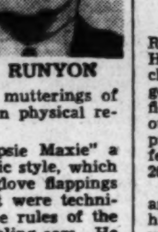

How about previewing the probable all-District college baseball nine . . . with G. U.'s Vinnie Powers in a bad slump after registering two straight victories in relief, the best two pitchers seem to be Maryland's lefty, Earl Springer, and its right-hander, Pershing Mondorff . . . Bob Burns, also of Maryland, appears to have an edge over both of G. U.'s backstoppers, Frank Blassek and Jim Castiglia . . . the best infield would be George Knepley, Maryland, at first; a teammate, Angelo (Shorty) Chumbris, at second, and Lou Ghecas and George Pajak, both of Georgetown, at short and third . . . the outfield is fairly difficult to choose . . . Keller and Georgetown's Joe McFadden are "must, but any number of boys are candidates for the third position . . . among these are Jim Durkin and Johnny McGowan, Georgetown, and Dick Newby, American U. ## The Brighter Side

By Damon Runyon

We ran into Mr. Max Rosenbloom out in Hollywood, where he is running an establishment called "Slapsie Maxie's," and he reminded us that we had given him that title back down the years when he was a prize fighter by trade.

RUNYON

He did not recall, however, his irritation at the title in the first instance, which took the form of vague mutterings of libel suits, and even physical reprisal.

He deemed "Slapsie Maxie" a reflection of his fistic style, which consisted of open-glove flappings and flickerings that were technical violations of the rules of the manly art of scrambling ears. He did not know then, of course, that he would one day deem the title of commercial value as a trade mark, but there it is in bright lights over his place of business.

Another prize fighter contemporaneous with Mr. Rosenbloom's fistic youth was equally sensitive about a title we gave him, but likewise wound up using it as something of an asset. That was Luis Angel Firpo, a giant from the Argentine with a great hairy chest and a shock of black hair like a fright wig. We called him "The Wild Bull of the Pampas."

Firpo burbled like an indignant camel over that for a while and refused to speak to us, but eventually he had the title painted on his automobile and put a huge pair of steer horns on the radiator cap by way of emphasis.

Runyon's Idea

As a sports writer, we made a practice of hanging those sonorous titles on prize fighters, borrowing the idea from the books on the old-time English gladiators. All the fighters of a couple of hundred years back had odd titles, such as "the Tipton Slasher," "Bendigo," "Death," "the Iron Man," and so forth.

The early American sports writers picked up the custom of tagging the prize fighters from the same place we did. They evolved "the Harlem Coffee Cooler," "the Boston Strong Boy," the Troy Giant," and numerous other picturesque handles, and finally old Uncle Bill Naughton came along with "Gentleman Jim" and "Pompadour Jim" for James J. Corbett and "Ruby Robert" for Bob Fitzsimmons.

Uncle Bill Naughton was probably the greatest American writer on boxing topics that ever lived. He had majesty of presence and authority of address. He was a Hearst sports editor in New York, Chicago and San Francisco. A son, Walter W. Naughton, had been a newspaperman for years in Los Angeles, but never followed sports writing.

We titled Dempsey "the Manassa Mauler," and George Godfrey "the Black Shadow of Leiperville," and Harry Wills "the Brown Panther of New Orleans," but the one we always liked best of all was "King of the Canebrakes" for Willie Stribling when he was going through the Southland country belting out pugilistic porpoise. Willie had it painted on the side of his airplane.

'That's Show Business'

However, let us go back to Mr. Rosenbloom, or "Slapsie Maxie." He got to be light heavyweight champion of the world before he got through. He has a well cauliflowered ear and a slightly ironed out nose as mementoes of more prize fighting that is good for a fellow. He must have had over 200 prize fights.

His place is a small night club and Mr. Rosenbloom is most of his own entertainment. He gets up on a little stage and goes through a routine that includes an imitation of Harry Richman, with all the waiters heckling him. It is quite funny, and the inmates of Hollywood insist to visitors that "Slapsie Maxie's" is one place they simply must see.

"That's show business," remarked Mr. Rosenbloom, drily, as he concluded his act and joined us at a table to talk about old adventures in the prize fighting game. It is characteristic of former prize fighters that they are always eager to talk on that topic no matter how far they have gotten away from the game.

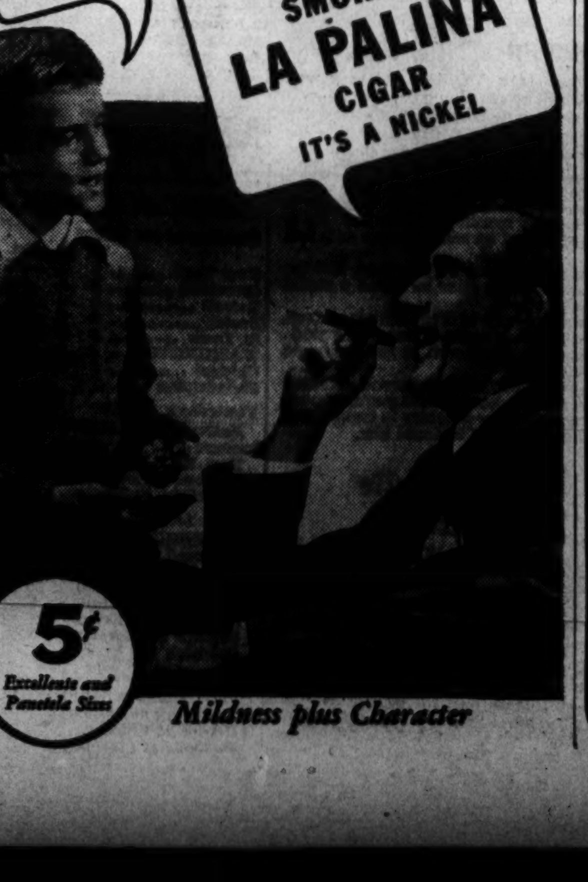

Mr. Rosenbloom was accounted a somewhat eccentric character when he was in his prize fighting heyday. Indeed, even when he was at his best he was thought by some to be shy a few marbles, as the saying is, but that was because they did not understand Mr. Rosenbloom. He was of a joyous, carefree nature, that could not be bonded by conventionality.

Change of Routine

His gay inner self he masked behind a slightly dead pan, that now serves him in good stead in his role of showman. Mr. Rosenbloom denies the report that he brought any gray hairs to the heads of prize-fight managers. He says that his own partial baldness was brought on by managers.

In addition to acting as entertainer in his cafe, the last role you would have expected of Mr. Rosenbloom, he is also an actor in the movies. In fact, after talking with us a while, he yawned and said he had to go to bed because he was getting up at 9 o'clock the next morning to report at a studio.

"Can you imagine me getting up at that hour to go to work?" said Mr. Rosenbloom. "When I was a prizefighter, that used to be about the time I would be found turning in."

St. Louis Loads Bases in Fifth But Fail to Score

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, April 25.—The Cincinnati Reds, the "people's choice" to win the National League race, clipped the St. Louis Cardinals, 5 to 1, here this afternoon. Lloyd Moore pitched the full nine innings.

He gave up ten hits, two for extra bases, but kept them well spread out and worked like a veteran in the pinches. The Cards had the bases loaded in the fifth and got two on in the eighth, but could not score.

Frank McCormick drove in the first two Red runs with a single in the first and scored the third marker on Harry Craft's single. W. Myers drove in the last two with a homer in the seventh.

McFadden Sparks Hoyas' 14-3 Victory Over Eagle Nine

Soph Fielder Triples With Bases Loaded

Drives in 4 Runs on 3 Hits; Smith Holds Eagles to 5 Safeties; Mahoney Homers

By Jack Munhall.

He's just a guy named Joe, but Georgetown's Leftfielder McFadden would never be passed by, especially in a search for the town's best young athlete. The broad-shouldered, pug-nosed sophomore who last winter earned all-District football honors as a quarterback, continued to rap loudly for baseball acclaim yesterday.

He rapped a tremendous triple in the third inning to empty the bases of three Georgetown men, erase a 3-to-2 American University lead, and touch off dynamite in the bats of his mates, who of a sudden splattered base hits all over the Hilltop field to rout the Eagles, 14 to 3.

It was most embarrassing to Staff Cassell's determined, but outclassed, nine, that towering poke that McFadden exploded to the distant embankment in left field, to spark a 5-run outburst in the third. For at the time the Eagles were hopped up over the prospect of avenging the 13-to-4 lacing Georgetown handed 'em several weeks ago.

Hammer Brown

With a pair of runs in the first and a single tally in the second, the Eagles were actually putting the pressure to Joe Judge's pets, who have lost only one in seven games. They were hitting Johnny Smith with a vengeance and romping around the bases with great abandon as he unloosed a pair of wild pitches. The Hoyas had picked up a run in the first and another in the third, but Moe Brown still had things fairly well under control.

That is, he did until he fed McFadden an outside ball. No sooner had the three McFadden-authored runs clattered over the plate than the Hoyas became more unruly than District traffic. Joe Moran, normally a weak hitter, dropped a single in center, scoring McFadden, and Jim Castiglia also popped a one-bagger to the middle field. But Pitcher Johnny Smith apparently hadn't been infected with the spirit as yet and flied to center for the second out. And then Lou Ghecas, who had led off the inning by scoring after drawing a walk, also flied out.

Not Satisfied

But Georgetown was not yet satisfied and continued to sock Brown's pitching black and blue. In the fourth the Hoyas got another to make it 7-3, added one in the sixth, two in the seventh and finished up with a cluster of four in the eighth.

Meanwhile Johnny Smith, the Hoyas' stocky righthander, had been throwing complete frustration at the suddenly docile Eagles. Mixing a nice curve with plenty of swift he set them back in order in the third, fourth and fifth, and allowed only three hits after the opening frame.

D. C. Would Match Abrams-Krieger

A telegram proposing a title match between Solly Krieger, world's middleweight champion, and George Abrams, local boy, in Griffith Stadium this summer yesterday was sent to the champion's manager, Hymie Caplin, by the District Boxing Commission.

The bout was suggested as a highlight to a tentative summer program that would bring at least two title fights and several outstanding fighters to Washington this summer.

The proposed summer card would bring together Leo Rodak and Mexican Joe Silva, featherweights; Joey Archibald, featherweight champion, and Petey Scalzo, in a title bout; Ceferino Garcia and Steve Mamakos, in a welterweight bout, and Lou Ambers, former lightweight champion and a fighter yet to be picked.

Hoyas, C. U. Meet On Ice Tonight

In the engagement which is scheduled for 8:30 the Hoyas will be seeking revenge for a 6-2 upset loss suffered at the hands of the hard-skating Cardinals several weeks ago, when Georgetown was missing four of its better players.

Wilson Beats Episcopal Nine, 5 to 1

Washingtonians' 4th Victory; D. C. Errors Help Losers Score

Alexandria, Va., April 25.—Bunching hits to squeeze all their scoring into two innings, Woodrow Wilson High School tossers turned back Episcopal High by a 5-to-1 margin in a well-played game here this afternoon. It was the Washingtonians' fourth victory in five starts and Episcopal's second straight loss to a District of Columbia high school nine.

The Presidents scored more than enough runs to win the ball game in the second inning when they got to Billy Peelle, Maroon hurler, for three hits and as many runs. Charlie Garner led off with a single. Joe Morgan stepped up the pace with a two-bagger that scored Garner, and Al Pyles followed through with a lusty home run to deep left-field to clean the bases.

In the seventh frame the Washingtonians grouped four more hits to add their final 2 tallies, Nick Cokinos' two-bagger driving in both runs after Wells and Hettenkemer had singled.

'Lefty' McIntire, Thumb Tired, Makes Home After 1,271 Miles

Footsore and broke, but with the desire to play baseball still burning like a beacon in his boney chest, Robert Lee McIntire came back to Washington Sunday. If nothing else, that makes the sandlot baseball season official, for Robert Lee, better known as "Lefty," is the District's most dyed-in-the-wool devotee of the sport.

"Lefty" left us some months ago, on his way to accept a glittering offer to pitch with the Panama City club of the Alabama-Florida League. The world was his personal oyster at the time and he figured nothing could stop his belated rise to the majors.

But "Lefty" is back with us now. In place of high hopes he has a wish to play nothing but semipro ball the rest of his life and a burning conviction that something very radical is wrong with the minor league variety.

Since he left Panama City last week "Lefty" has covered 1,271 miles of highway, all of it with the aid of his good right thumb. For some strange reason, better known to "Lefty" and his traveling companion, Willie Kauffman (or perhaps to the guys who gave them rides) he made his trip home via Birmingham, Nashville and Louisville, rather than by the shorter route. But he's home now, and by all indications he's glad of it. The "Iron Horse" of District mounds is ready to sign with any and all clubs that want his pitching services.

"That was some trip we took, though," "Lefty" sighs. "For four days Willie and me lived off five bucks. We slept in waiting rooms, ate nothing but hot dogs and walked—well, about 1,000 miles, it seemed."

Just to get back into the swing of things, "Lefty" pitched a 7-inning shutout for 7-Up nine yesterday on the Fairlawn field, 6 to 0, over St. Elizabeth's.

"I didn't get to pitch enough to suit me," Lefty says, "but we'll have longer games. Watch me. I'll pitch them guys to a pennant."

First C. U. Golf Team Since '34 Meets Baltimore U. Today

Cardinal Quartet, as Yet Untested, Will Play Schedule of 6 More Matches, All at Home

Catholic University's first golf team since 1934 will journey to Mount Pleasant golf course today to meet the Baltimore University golfers with an untested squad of Fred Stant, national intercollegiate boxing champ, and Jack Miller, former Iowa State junior golf champion.

The other two members of the team will be Dick Berberich, local product and former southpaw member of the Gonzaga Prep links team, and Jerry Ledvina, of Manitowoc, Wis.

Robert Hickey, Denver; Joe Reidy, Winstead, Conn., and Pearson Stanley, Chevy Chase, are alternates and will fill out a six-man team for future matches.

The boys have scheduled a match with each of the teams in the Maryland Intercollegiate Golf League, now in its first year of play, and if their record is favorable they will join the circuit next year, when it is expected to be a stronger organization.

Today's match is the only one out of town, the Cardinals having booked Western Maryland, Loyola, George Washington and Maryland at Indian Spring, Congressional and Army-Navy.

State Senate Investigates Fla. Racing

Committeeman Says Hialeah Park Linked With Underworld

By the Associated Press.

Tallahassee, Fla., April 25.—State Senate investigators pursued an inquiry today into charges of corruption in Florida racing—particularly an assertion by one committeeman that Hialeah Race Track near Miami is linked with the underworld.

Chairman Ernest Graham of Miami shook his finger in the face of Harry Fink, former New York bookmaker, and described him as "Exhibit A" of the Miami track's connection with underworld activities.

Fink was a witness on the committee's specific probe of Graham's charge that Miami racing interests "killed" youthful John C. Horning's million-dollar track at Hollywood, near Miami, after its fourth day of operation this season.

Fink testified last night that he joined in providing $60,000 change money for the new track, then agreed to withdrawing the money last February 6 a few hours before the track's fifth day of racing was to have started.

Down in Front

With Richards Vidmer

New York, April 25.—Mike Jacobs, the ring master, was back from the Pacific Coast where he had gone to stage Joe Louis' latest defense of his world's heavyweight championship. Uncle Mike was back, and as few Eastern observers had figured it worth the long trip to see what promised to be, and was, a very short fight, they dropped in on Uncle Mike at his Hippodrome hang-out for first-hand information.

They found the ring master dozing—slightly in a deep leather chair, but he graciously aroused himself and extended smiling greetings all around.

VIDMER

"Well, how was it, Mike?" he was asked, pointblank without any preliminary warning.

"How was what?"

"The fight."

"Oh, that?" and the familiar Jacobs grin spread across his face. "It was all right. What did you expect?"

Everyone seemed agreed that they expected Louis to knock out Roper in something between two and three minutes. And none of them had been disappointed or surprised when he did just that. While they were reaching these conclusions, Uncle Mike returned to his deep leather chair and listened to everyone admitting that he knew what was going to happen all the time.

"Protection Is Bad"

"What kind of fight was it?" someone asked, returning to the subject. "It would have been all right if they gave you any protection out there," the ring master replied. "But that's what was wrong—the police protection was bad. They don't know how to handle the crowd. They had the ticket booths for the cheap seats right up by the gates and the people who had to buy tickets on their way in, jammed up the people who had bought their tickets in advance. We would have done $15,000 more business if the crowd had been handled right."

"Yeah, Mike. But how did it look?"

"It looked fine. All the movie people were there. They turned out swell and filled all the high price seats. We handled those tickets ourselves and they didn't have any trouble getting their right locations. It looked all right, but there was a hell of a mess at the gates where they sold the cheap seats and a lot of guys came in over the fence. But from up front, at the ringside, it looked good."

The interviewers were becoming just a little exasperated at their efforts to get any first-hand description of the fight itself, and for a while spoke of other things.

Next Number

The telephone suddenly rang and Uncle Mike awakened with a start, which reminded everybody that they had come in to find out about the Louis-Roper fight and not to discuss baseball and horse racing. So when Mike hung up the receiver another effort was made in that direction.

"Well, tell us about Louis, Mike. Did he look good?"

"Sure. He looked all right. Say, you know, the orders for tickets are coming in early for that Galento thing. I been getting orders for eighty and a hundred in a bunch. Everybody seems to be taking a party to the fight. It ought to be a sellout."

"Never mind the Louis-Galento fight, Mike, we'll get around to that later. What about the Louis-Roper fight?"

"Well, that fight's over with. Why don't you talk about the next big one—the fight between Max Baer and Lou Nova on the first of June. That's what you fellows ought to be asking about now. Listen, this Nova-Baer fight is going to be the most important fight this summer. Everybody's been wondering who is going to lick Joe Louis, and the winner of this fight may be the answer. Nova's a young, strong fellow, coming up and Baer is——"

NEWS TO YOU—

This Glamour Cigar

HERE'S an entirely new conception of a ten-cent cigar—this Robt. Burns Corona. Frankly it is made to surpass cigars of its class—designed to surprise men paying more than ten cents for cigars. To say that it is better than ten-cent classification may sound blunt, but that's the fact of it.

With the prestige of its patrician corona shape, the classic model that has cast its spell over smokers for many a year, the luscious Robt. Burns Corona is the glamour cigar of the ten-cent field. It challenges you Havana smokers who love a hearty, full-bodied cigar. Many smokers find it hard to believe it can be sold at ten cents. Try it at a dime at any good cigar stand. Your doubt will vanish in fragrant smoke.

Aethelwold Captures Greenwich Purse at Havre de Grace

Philadelphia Handicap Threat

W. L. Brann Entry Scores Easily in Tune-up for Race Next Saturday

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace, April 25.—Aethelwold, owned by W. L. Brann and conditioned this spring at Benning, D. C., served notice on four other eligibles today for Saturday's $10,000 added Philadelphia Handicap that he must be reckoned with by winning the Greenwich Purse, outstanding event on the Tuesday program withnessed by a crowd of 8,000.

Beaten off when he encountered much hard luck in the running of the Harford Handicap here on opening day, Aethelwold had clear sailing today and finished three quarters of a length in front of A. G. Vanderbilt's Heelfly, third money going to Mrs. Colin MacLeod's Pernie with Teddy Weed and Chaps forming the "also ran" department.

While preparing Challedon for the Kentucky Derby, Trainer Lou Schaefer seems to have been giving Aethelwold attention for handicap work. Aethelwold appeared capable of running all night and stepped the mile and 70 yards in a capable 1:43 1-5. The Challenger 2d colt was overlooked by the majority of the bettors and provided a $20.90 mutuel for the "guess righters."

Teddy Weed Fails

Teddy Weed, winner of the $10,000 closing day handicap at Tropical Park, was dismal in the role of favorite. He set the early pace and stopped badly when collared by Aethelwold early in the backstretch run. Heelfly was close enough during the opening half but made the start of his move sandwiched between Chaps and Pernie. He finally got clear, cut down some of Aethelwold's advantage but he hung in the all-important final sixteenth. At this stage, Jockey George Seabo was driving Aethelwold to the last notch.

The W. L. Brann color bearer is in the Philadelphia with only 108 pounds.

Mrs. Elizabeth C. Bosley, who sent Chase Me out to win his maiden effort over this track, unveiled what she hopes will prove another star in Belay, a 3-year-old son of Display, owned by A. C. Bostwick. Like Chase Me, brilliant workouts made Belay a strong tip in his field and the colt proved proved worthy of his backing by romping off with the purse despite an impost of 120 pounds. Belay finished four lengths in front of Kaptime and eight lengths ahead of Winning Mark.

He paid $9.40.

Personal Proposition

Jockey Al Shelhamer made the daily double a personal proposition. He completed the $45.80 transaction with Belay after he had ridden Carlis Sims' Satin Rolls to a neck victory in the opening dash for juveniles. Uprising and Whoosh figured in the thrilling blanket finish.

Alms, the odds-on favorite in the fourth race (also known as the Harewood Purse), took a beating from Hants, owned by Hal Price Headley. H. G. Bedwell's Superstition was third in the vest pocket field of five contesting at a mile and a sixteenth. The start was bad with Hants vritually beating the gate and Superstition all but left. In charge of Jockey L. Hardy, Hants paid $8.70.

HAPPY HOSTESS closed some ground. MATTAPONY had a rough trip. DROOP set good pace, but weakened badly when caught. HALO pressed the pace for stretch and tired. FYAN raced close to rail and weakened. Two-dollar mutuels paid—AETHELWOLD, $20.90, $9.30, $3.40; HEELFLY, $5.80, $2.90; PERNIE, $2.30.

AETHELWOLD circled leaders going into backstretch and disposed of TEDDY WEED to get to front, saved ground while setting pace and withstood a long drive to hold HEELFLY safe. The latter broke first from under hood, was allowed to settle into stride, was forced to race in close quarters between CHAPS and PERNIE leaving backstretch, gained gradually to sixteenth pole and hung thereafter. PERNIE moved up menacingly at far turn, but weakened at close. CHAPS was shut off at first turn, moved up and tired. TEDDY WEED showed speed for a quarter and quit.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—GOLDEN VEIN, $9.30, $4.50, $3.20; SAN ANTIOCA, $3.50, $2.90; SUMMER HAIL, $6.60.

GOLDEN VEIN, within striking distance from start, was guided wide for racing room leaving backstretch, went to SAN ANTIOCA with good energy and was opening a gap at end. SAN ANTIOCA moved up boldly at far turn to dispose of THE LAKE, opened a lead, but could not resist the winner while tiring. SUMMER HAIL had good speed for a half, and weakened gradually thereafter, but was best of others. THE LAKE set pace and tired badly. FRANCO SAXON had early speed. LOURDES failed to show speed at any stage.

BEACON ROCK, keen forward factor from break, moved up to take command nearing far turn, shook off BOB JUNIOR, withstood challenge of HELEN'S LAD and was drawing out at end. HELEN'S LAD, well placed to backstretch, moved up menacingly on outside approaching stretch, went slightly wide and bore out in stretch run. PRADIS closed with good energy. ZELITONE set and forced early pace, saved ground thereafter and was tiring at end. LYCONNA dropped back after a quarter and closed some ground. SCORIA closed full of run. SIR TIME had early foot. BOB JUNIOR stopped badly.

Hanford Rides Technician In Derby, May 6

Insco Colt Ridden By Noted Jockey in Two Victories This Year

By the Associated Press.

Louisville, Ky., April 25.—Ira Hanford is to ride Technician in the Kentucky Derby.

The 20-year-old Omaha jockey came from Keeneland today in compnay with his brother, Carl, himself a former rider of note, and after a conference with Herbert Woolf's trainer, Ben Jones, accepted the mount on the Insco colt.

The other outstanding news at Churchill Downs was that El Chico and Challedon are to arrive shortly for final preparations before the May 6 race.

Lou Shaefer plans to ship the W. L. Brann colt from Maryland Thursday while the William Ziegler ace is leaving New York Sunday.

Ira Hanford has ridden in previous derbies. He rode Bold Venture to victory over Brevity in 1936. He also has ridden Technician to win twice during the Florida season. One of the triumphs was in the $25,000 Flamingo Stakes.

Mrs. Bessie Franzheim, Houston, Tex., sportswoman, motored up from Lexington, where she maintains one of the finer thoroughbred nurseries, to give her Derby candidate, Xalapa Clown, the once over.

Mrs. Franzheim's Eternal colt was limited to a barrier schooling session and weather and track conditions permitting, will be set down over a route of ground tomorrow.

Jockey Alfred Robertson, who was being counted out of the Derby by some because of a shoulder injury during the meeting at Oaklawn, turned up to exercise Gold Teddy, one of the Milky Way 2-year-olds. He said he felt fine after the workout and would be glad to accept a mount for the event.

The lesser lights among the eligibles at the Downs held the spotlight today. Magic Key, Up the Creek and Giles County, from the Milky Way Stable, were out for useful breezes and promised to be ready as substitutes should No Competition and On Location fail to measure up to expectations.

Shady Brook's Times and Dan Lehan's Fern Creek both worked a full mile. Times went the distance in 1:49 2-5 handily, while Fern Creek worked in 1:48 driving.

Bill Bennings

At the Post

Dear Al:

The baby racers will hold the spotlight here tomorrow with the twenty-seventh running of the Aberdeen Stakes. Eleven frisky, rollicking youngsters have been named for the test of 4½ furlongs and Washington fans will have betting and rooting interest in Gustave Ring's Rumba Gus. This Saxon colt took the Kindergarten at Bowie in smashing style and proved his mud-running ability in his only start over this track. Owner Ring, who is reported a master at the rumba, probably will dance a jig if his star can pick up 122 pounds and outrun his opposition. The little Gus horse meets tougher rivals than he did over at Bowie but he looks like a real good 2-year-old and anything that beats him will know he has been to the races. After tomorrow's Aberdeen, only one important stake remains on the books here. On Saturday, the Philadelphia Handicap will hold the center of the stage. Bourbon King, Hal Price Headley's ace, served notice on his rivals that he must be respected when he turned in a mile workout in 1:40 4-5 this morning. This is about the best trial shown by any horse during the present meeting. Bull Lea, winner over Stagehand and others in the $50,000 Widener, arrived at Pimlico and is slated to get a serious workout tomorrow morning. A man bought a ticket yesterday and returned to report that he had been sold a ticket on a race the previous day. He argued long and loud. Finally, at the suggestion of the mutuel clerk, he took another look in his pockets and pulled out the right ticket. Many race fans here have the impression that mutuel clerks are trying to do them. I know a lot of these clerks and I also know that they are fired the first time they make a false move. Those jobs are in big demand and even if a clerk was not honest, he hardly would jeopardize his position. Mutuel clerks are regular fellows. The trouble is that occasionally a clerk makes a mistake and the race fan condemns all of his kind. On the contrary, several times a day each clerk has to call back ticket purchasers who do not wait for their change. BILL.

First race—The Heighe entry gets the call in the opener. Part One needed conditioning in his last and is classy enough to win this. Plot showed a good effort and probably will be runner-up. Maroc went well with older horses last week and may prove dangerous. Big Buddy is in form and should go well.

Second race—Dissembler was beaten only a length for all the money by Boston Mary in his recent trial at Bowie. He has prepped for this event and gets top figure despite high weight. Cornwallis has been consistent with this company. Kinross, making his first start this year, is not outclassed and has a good money chance.

Third race — Perlette received strong betting support when she placed to Dog Flower Thursday in her first start of the season. She weakened in that event, but should be ready to whip this bunch. Counsuello raced well with high-grade platers at Laurel last fall and will be the one to beat. Sunny Shore is on edge for a good effort.

Fourth race—Rumba Gus has demonstrated his ability to whip the best juveniles in the State and should shoulder his high impost to a clear-cut victory. The three-horse entry of Imprudent, Arden Lass and Nosy figure to run in that order behind the top horse on the merits of good local races. Press Time will have the advantage of Maurice Peters' riding and has a money chance.

Fifth race—Accolade has performed well with the best in the handicap field and meets high-grade platers in this heat. He need only be fit to take this field into camp. Rehearsal indicates her best form by whipping a good field at first asking this season. Best of the others, Drudgery has raced well in graded handicaps, should stick it out for the third place.

Sixth race—Balapin was unplaced with better-grade platers last outing. He beat this kind handily by four lengths in a previous heat and has a slight edge. Dark Friend whipped a good field in the mud, but with a fast track in prospect he appears second best. Couleedam has class; can win on best effort.

Seventh race—Gyral is rounding to form after several poor efforts this spring. Third to Count Tetrarch at Bowie, he is nicely placed with these cheap ones. Should take down the winner's award. Mantagna, outclassed in his last start, was a winner at Bowie. Counter Pass should go well at this distance.

Bill Ackerman

on Fishing

At a meeting of the Game Fishermen's Association at Ocean City last week 500 marlin pins were ordered for distribution to successful anglers during the coming season. At the same time it was decided to make this pin a permanent symbol. It is also the mark of membership in the Ocean City Marlin Club, in which initiation and dues are the hooking, fighting and landing unaided of a white marlin from a boat clearing from Ocean City and flying the Game Fishermen's Association flag. Last year, although 910 marlin were caught, there were only about 600 members registered. This was due to doubles, as well as to the boats not having membership in the association. So for those who want one of these distinctive pins this year—fish from a guideboat bearing the G. F. A. '39 pennant; that, in addition, means it has been inspected and found seaworthy—fully equipped for safe and comfortable sport.

ACKERMAN

The bill up before the Florida Legislature that would have taxed every angler fishing in either the fresh or salt waters of the State the sum of $2 was thrown out without ever coming up for a vote. We think it might be that this bill was the proverbial "herring," to distract sportsmen from other legislation which might be equally odious. It seems almost certain, in face of the strong organization of sportsmen in southern Florida, that it would have been impossible to pass it.

Permithion Granted

Anglers who heretofore have been prohibited from taking game fish (large and smallmouth bass, bream, crappie, blue gill, robin perch, goggle-eye and grass perch) with hook and line from commercial waters in North Carolina during the closed season from April 1 through May 9, will now be permitted to take these fish at any time, including the closed season, if they use hook and line or rod and reel.

This action was taken by the board of conservation and development and as a result, the law now prohibits only the use of fish traps or baskets in the taking of game fish from commercial waters during the spawning season.

Commercial fishing waters are the various sounds along the coast, some of which during the past several years have returned to a freshwater status, and the lower rivers and creeks which empty into these sounds. There is no license required for fishing in commercial waters.

Fishing for warm-water fish in all inland waters, however, is prohibited until the end of the present closed season on May 10, except in the far western part of North Carolina, where the closed season extends to June 10.

Need of Limitation

If the black bass are multiplying to such an extent in these areas to warrant such action, who are we to decry it? That is true on Lake Mattamuskeet, in the same area, but we would rather see these fish seined out to stock other waters, of which the United States Bureau of Fisheries says "black bass may be expected to decrease steadily unless they are protected by a closed season during the spawning period. Their successful natural propagation requires that they be undisturbed during this period so that they may protect their nests from fish that would consume or otherwise destroy the eggs."

There is also need for limiting the number of black bass that may be taken by an angler in a calendar day—this number to be regulated by the scarcity or plentifulness of adult fish, but always sufficiently small to discourage overfishing.

Sound Finance Vital to Nation, Reilly Declares

New Economic Theories Found Wanting, Says 2d National's President

The importance of financial leadership in a democracy was reviewed by John A. Reilly, president of the Second National Bank, in an address before the Bethesda-Chevy Chase Lions Club at Kenwood Golf and Country Club last night.

"Our philosophy of government has been deeply tinctured by new economic theories already found wanting," he said. "The most enduring legacy of our race is the spirit of free enterprise. Men are not enterprising because they are free—they are free because they are enterprising.

"To save our democracy America must take up the tools of sound finance and fashion the future of our country. Our capitalistic system will remain but in this strange interlude we must not lose our perspective.

"The smooth functioning of industry in our capitalistic system has a pronounced effect on all of our people. In this program management plays a prominent part. Management acts as a steward for the investor, the laborer and consumer. Management must be honest, capable and fearless. It may be kind but not sentimental; liberal but not extravagant; frugal but not ultra-conservative. It should have three definite objectives:

"1. Service to the public.

"2. A complete and broad understanding of the rights of labor. We should be conscious of the fact that fair wages and reasonable hours are essentials if a business is to really prosper.

"3. The rights of the investor, who should always have a fair return on his investment.

"Business and financial leaders cannot quit under criticism. It is pleasant to be complacent but nations as proud and as great as our own America have gone down leaving only broken fragments to tell the story of their glory. We must not desert our posts."

Foreign Trade Bankers

The association embraces only banks operating foreign departments with international connections and, in view of current events, the discussions will be of special interest to other banks throughout the country.

Real Estate M. & G. Corp.

The president of the Real Estate Mortgage & Guaranty Corporation yesterday announced that, at the suggestion of some of the larger holders of preferred stock of the corporation, and pursuant to a resolution of its board of directors, he had appointed a committee of five of the largest holders of preferred stock on the board to consider and to report to the board at the next meeting changes which should be made in the capital structure of the corporation with the view of eliminating the further accumulation of dividends which, it is believed, is affecting the market value of the stock. Any plan approved by the directors will have to be submitted to and voted on by the stockholders.

Wheat Advances With Outlook for Poor Winter Crop

Chicago, April 25 (AP).—Definite signs of a setback in prospects for winter wheat in some districts of the Southwest, the first really pessimistic crop news since the growing season began, gave wheat prices the sharpest upturn in weeks today. July and September wheat rose as much as 1¼ cents to the best level in almost three months.

While reports of less favorable growing conditions have been coming over commission house wires for the past several days, today's news more or less confirmed trade belief that there has been some change, though not radical, in the winter wheat picture.

Wheat started steady, ignoring a ⅛@⅜ lower close at Liverpool, but soon developed strength and was up ⅝ cent at the end of the first hour. Thereafter liquidation of May contracts prior to the delivery period next month depressed the market but the deferred deliveries continued to forge upward to the best levels. Wheat was ⅝@1¼ higher than yesterday's close, May 69¾@69⅝, July 69¼@69⅛. Corn advanced ⅛@⅜, May 48⅜@48½. July 50@50⅛; oats ⅛@¼, rye ⅛@½; lard 10 to 15 cents.

Stocks Hold Firm in Dull Trading
Traders Await Hitler's Friday Speech
N. Y. Transit Issues Feature Bond Market

New York, April 25.—The approach of Hitler's speech Friday kept Wall Street under wraps today; at least that was the prevailing excuse for a turnover on the big board of only 420,810 shares and price changes that were largely of the one-eighth point variety. Early prices were better than those of the previous day and while much of the gain was lost in the final hour, the composite average ended with a small gain of 0.07 point. Metals, steels and the better grade rails were the most popular stocks.

Aside from waiting for the German leader's answer to President Roosevelt's appeal for a period of ten years' peace, the street's activity also was reduced by the dearth of the type of financial news developments which usually can be counted upon to stir speculative enthusiasm. A firmer market for export copper helped the metal shares; the statistical position of the oil industry was weakened by a rise in refinery supplies; the report of United States Steel, issued after the close, showed earnings far below preliminary unofficial estimates; the introduction of the British budget, reflecting large scale expenditures for defense, did not appear to upset London traders for securities in that market were firm.

Adjustment Expected

Aside from the above day to day developments regarding specific situations there has been a change in sentiment in the financial district which is no less important to investors because it cannot be measured statistically. Throughout the financial district the last two days there has been a growing confidence that the European political tangle, which has had the world on the verge of war for five months, will be adjusted without resort to armed conflict.

Among the manifestations of this is the fact that these two days passed without the engagement of any foreign gold, the first time in weeks that such a thing has happened.

This, and the improvement in foreign exchanges, particularly the guilder, supply evidence that foreign investors are more sanguine about the outlook. Naturally much depends upon the tone of Hitler's reply, and it is taken for granted that he will refuse the President's request in strong terms, but if he goes no further it will be regarded as reassuring.

The day's domestic trade news was not as favorable as the changed sentiment on the European situation. Unseasonably cold weather doubtless accounted for another rise in refinery gasoline stocks, which occurred despite a reduction of 50,000 barrels a day in refinery runs. Motor fuel supplies, at refineries and in transit, increased nearly 700,000 barrels.

Export Copper in Demand

The better demand for export copper raised hopes that the recent price cuts, which carried copper to 10 cents a pound, have come to an end and that this price will be the low for the move. In the steel industry, Atchison let a big rail order and with any improvement in the international situation it is felt that many orders, held back by the recent uncertainity, will put in their appearance.

The United States Steel Corporation's report, which showed shipments for the first quarter 9.7 per cent in excess of those of the previous quarter, returned a net of only about one-seventh as much, doubtless reflecting the business that was taken at cut prices in September and October but was not shipped and paid for until this year.

Most of the leading stocks moved within narrow limits today. Chrysler Motors, Bethlehem and United States Rubber turned in good performances and there were small gains in Republic, Steel and Nickel.

Bond Market Firm

Listed bonds were firm in an idle session today. Local traction issues were the bright spot of the market, with gains up to 3 points recorded in Manhattan Railway liens, while Interborough and B. M. T. bonds were almost equally strong. The hope of early unification progress prompted the renewed buying of the tractions. Other sections of the market were almost completely neglected and the variations were of little significance. Turnover was only $4,590,000.

Foreign dollar bonds continued to attract a little attention, with a rallying tendency evident. German and Italian bonds were in demand in the expectation that Hitler's speech on Friday will be pacific. Belgian and Scandinavian issues improved further, but Australian and Canadian bonds merely idled. In the Latin-American default group small gains were the rule.

Secondary rail liens in the domestic corporate department showed both gains and losses, but the advances were more numerous. Some of the borderline carrier bonds did well, while default rails held to former levels. Holding company bonds were dull, and industrial convertibles reflected merely the idleness of the equities department. Other special groups failed to develop significant trends.

United States Treasury securities showed small fractional advances, and the guaranteed issues of the farm and home corporations were similarly steady. Telephone debentures fell slightly, but best power and light, rail and industrial bonds were firm.

Cotton Futures Dip 2 to 10 Points With Liquidation

New York, April 25 (AP).—A general liquidating movement—touched off by circulation of 155 delivery notices against May contracts—left cotton futures 2 to 10 points lower today.

Prices rose to net gains of 5 to 10 points at the highs just before the notices began to appear. But the market started to sag as selling of May and transferring from near deliveries forward became more aggressive.

Principal support on the decline came from mill accounts and New Orleans interests. Earlier the market was boosted by short covering, good buying by spot interests in May and July and Bombay demands for October.

U. S. Steel Nets $660,551 In 1st Quarter

Compares With Loss Of $1,292,151 in Same 1938 Period

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 25.—United States Steel Corporation reported today a net profit of $660,551 for the March quarter, compared with profit of $4,394,454 in the previous quarter and a net loss of $1,292,151 in the March quarter of 1938. Directors ordered the regular quarterly preferred dividend of $1.75 a share, payable May 20 to stock of record April 28. Edward R. Stettinius, chairman, said:

"While the rate of operations during the quarter, measured by production and shipments of finished steel products, showed a slight improvement over the fourth quarter of 1938, the earnings for the quarter reflected the generally lower average level of prices realized without proportionately compensating adjustments in labor and material costs, which continue at the high levels of last year."

18 Cents a Share on Preferred

The net for the March quarter was equal to 18 cents a share on the 3,602,811 shares of 7 per cent preferred stock. During the quarter shipments averaged 50.2 per cent of capacity and production 51.7 per cent.

The first-quarter shipments amounted to 2,235,209 tons, compared with 2,037,144 tons in the December quarter and with 1,565,244 tons in the first quarter of 1938.

Stettinius said that although shipments in the March quarter exceeded those of the preceding three-month period, the increase was less than the normal seasonal expectation.

Gen. Motors to Spend $10,000,000 in Year

Wilmington, Del., April 25 (AP).—General Motors Corporation will spend about $10,000,000 for new plant investment during 1939, John T. Smith, vice president, told stockholders at the annual meeting today. This compared with $17,000,000 in 1938 and over $60,000,000 in 1937.

$65,000,000 National Steel Issues Offered

First Mortgage Bonds Are Priced at 99%, Serial Notes at Par

An issue of $50,000,000 first (collateral) mortgage bonds 3 per cent series, due 1965, of the National Steel Corporation, together with $15,000,000 serial notes, maturing from April 1 next year to April 1, 1949, with interest ranging from ½ per cent to 2½ per cent, are being offered today by a group of investment banking houses headed by Kuhn, Loeb & Co. The bonds are priced at 99 per cent and interest and the notes at par and interest.

According to the registration statement the proceeds from the sale of the securities will be applied as follows:

Forty-nine million, three hundred and fifty thousand dollars to the redemption at 105 per cent and accrued interest of $47,000,000 principal amount of the company's 4 per cent series bonds.

Nine million, nine hundred and seventeen thousand dollars to the redemption at 105½ per cent and accrued interest of $9,400,000 principal amount of the company's 3¾ per cent series bonds.

The balance of the proceeds, together with treasury funds to the extent required, will be advanced to Great Lakes Steel Corporation, a subsidiary, and will be used by that company to discharge a $5,000,000 deferred obligation representing a portion of the cost of additional facilities constructed during the past two years. Accrued interest on the bonds to be redeemed will be paid out of the company's treasury funds, it is stated.

The notes are redeemable at the option of the company after at least 30 days' notice at the principal amount and accrued interest plus a premium, equal to ⅜ per cent of the principal amount for each year or fraction thereof from the date fixed for such redemption to April 1 next preceding the maturity date expressed in the notes.

Associated with Kuhn, Loeb & Co. as underwriters are: Hairriman Ripley & Co., Inc., White, Weld & Co., Lee Higginson Corporation, Smith, Barney & Co., The First Boston Corporation and Blyth & Co., Inc.

To watch a man at his work to see how he builds up a business successfully—then to see his home, the furniture he's bought, his new car and savings account, is the best way to know the true story behind an unusual success hard to describe on paper.

Not a get-rich-quick scheme. However, we have found that many men who never previously even thought they could do work of this kind have found it to be just the opportunity they sought for years, and are now making up to $1,000.00 a month or more. Others $750.00, $400.00, $300.00. For example, last month right here in Washington and nearby cities in this territory:

E. W., former electric company employe, totaled $386.43 last month.

G. W., former salesman, $319.78 for the month.

H. A., previously worked in a paper mill; made $351.70 last month.

J. D., previously a salesman, had earnings of $414.64 for the month.

H. A., former chain store manager, $364.32 last month.

W. B., former farmer, drew $605.28 for the month.

L. R., once a mail carrier, made $417.01 last month.

P. M., former salesman, made $367.27 last month.

C. B., former electrician, $311.91 for the month.

R. B., former salesman, $447.21.

P. L., a former machinist who started in January of this year, had immediate cash earnings of $249.59 for the month.

If you are of good reputation, active, alert, willing to learn and to work hard every day to make a genuine success in return for the privilege of a genuine opportunity in a permanent connection with good people who will deeply interest themselves in helping you to get started and to get along, make your application Thursday morning.

We have tried to state the facts and requirements clearly, to interest only worthy men who are in need of a good, substantial opportunity. Applicants will be personally interviewed, Thursday morning from 9:30 to 12:30, at 1010 Vermont Avenue, Suite 301, Denrike Bldg., Washington.

There are some plays—rare though they may be—that excite the admiration of even the opponents who suffered by them, stilling all argument.

A defensive play that the experts in the Vanderbilt Cup championship, now in session at the Shelton, Lexington avenue and Forty-ninth street, would envy, was made by Edwin T. Randall, of Cleveland, in his local duplicate game.

He deliberately threw away two high cards to prevent being stuck with the lead and forced to play into a tenace. The principle of the play is not uncommon but the situation in which it developed is.

Randall's partner was G. W. Parratt; his opponents, Mrs. W. J. Myers and Dr. James B. Skuse.

"Doc Skuse never puts much faith in my word and he doubted I really had a spade bid, but after this experience he says he will believe me in the future.

"North opened the diamond five. South played the king and Doc won with the ace. The heart finesse was taken. The spade queen was led. South covered with the king, and the spade ace won. A heart was played to the ace, and followed by East's spade six. South went in with the jack and led the last heart which West ruffed."

This was the situation:

"Skuse went ofter me hammer and tongs. He played the spade ten, then the nine. You see if South plays the three then the seven of spades, declarer leads the last spade. South is in and must play clubs into East's king and East's two hearts are good.

"South played the spade eight on West's ten, the seven on West's nine. By this defense West made three spade tricks but nothing else. Down one at three doubled. He will make four-odd if South does not deliberately drop the high spades."

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

An interesting observation on the personnel situation within the Department of Justice was made by the United Federal Workers of America before the sub-committee on State, Justice and Commerce of the House, as follows:

"Overtime has grown tremendously. The average overtime of an employe in the Justice Department is now 40 hours each month, as against an average of 30 hours each month in all other agencies. The effect of this is to have the employes of the department working six and one-half or seven day week."

Despite the fact of underpay, absence of increases and overtime, as the U. F. W. A. contended, "the efficiency of the department is as high today as it has ever been. This is partly due to the fact that it has been possible to bring in very good people at very low pay in the last few years of depression; and partly to the fact that the new people brought in have come in with very great enthusiasm and are still working with very high morale. That morale will not continue once these young professional people come to the conclusion that they are unappreciated, in dead-end occupation, expected to carry an undue load of work."

Some may use this statement further to advocate automatic increases. But most of the new personnel directors lean against the automatic raise, contending that such practice would stifle individual initiative. The answer to that might be that if no raises come anyway—what of individual initiative, then?

M. S. SAGER

Why don't some of those beauties in the National Archives compete in The Post's "Beauty and Brains" contest? The deadline—May 5—is nearing. It is only a matter of calling by The Post and becoming a candidate and then winning, possibly, a free trip to the New York World's Fair and a handsome silver loving cup.

MEREL S. SAGER, popular NPS official and lecturer, will speak this evening in the departmental auditorium "A Cruise to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands." He will show colored movies and lantern slides made last summer on the Government-sponsored cruise to the Caribbean. There is no admission charge.

The Dexter Club, Division of Records, Justice Department, will give its spring dance Friday evening, 10 to 1 a. m., at Almas Temple. A half of the proceeds will go to charity.

Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard officers who are native Mississippians will be honored at a dance and reception to be sponsored tonight at the Wardman Park Hotel by the Mississippi State Society. The reception is at 9; the dancing begins at 10. ELLEN S. WOODWARD is president of the society; JOE M. HOWORTH, secretary.

The Federal Diary salutes SAMUEL GOMPERS, Chief Clerk in the Labor Department, who this week begins his fifty-third year of service in the Government. Mr. Gompers is that quiet, unassuming but highly efficient type of public employe who, in past years, gave the Federal service its high reputation and tone. He himself is an outstanding example of the merit system working at its best. His rise to present position was entirely on the basis of merit, and the splendid reputation he enjoys among his fellow workers demonstrates that type of character that any public service is proud to have.

Bob Burns Says—

I never have believed that you can change a person's habits of a life-time over night. That goes for the habits of the whole family, too. I remember when I was a boy down home Grandpaw Snazzy came into some money from the sale of some hogs—and the family started livin' a little better. We stopped fightin' about who'd get the greasy end of the corn bread. But we struck purty much to the same old family customs. We still all gathered around to look whenever anyone started a fresh towel.

Just last Spring Grandpaw Pelican Snelson got sick in bed with first the mumps, then the measles, and then chickenpox.

The doctor said, "Snelson, you're 97 years old, don't you think it's a little late in life for you to start havin' all these childish diseases?"

And Grandpaw Snelson just looked at the doctor kinda scornfully and said, "Now, Doc, don't you go tryin' to change my habits. I know I've been slow all my life—but I get things done!"

Her Majesty the Queen:

Duchess, Hiding Illness, Sought To Conclude Long Empire Tour

Smiled Cheerfully For Onlookers While Suffering Tonsilitis

By Lady Cynthia Asquith

Chapter XV

Though it was with an aching heart that Queen Elizabeth on a bleak winter's day, January 6, 1927, embarked on the Renown for Australia, she showed no outward signs of repining. Never had she radiated happiness more effectively than during the six long weeks of the voyage. Throwing herself into all the amusements of life on board, she added the role of dancing mistress to all its usual activities.

When the Renown passed the Equator King George cheerfully underwent the ordeal known as crossing the line. This ritual involved being lathered with a billposter's brush, shaved with a giant wooden razor, and ducked. On the same day Queen Elizabeth was invested with the Order of the Golden Mermaid, not nearly so violent an experience.

With what success the future King, in spite of his innate shyness, played his difficult part in Australia, is well known, but few words about Queen Elizabeth as an Ambassadress of Empire may add a little more color to her portrait.

Exhausting Tour

Though very interesting and often enjoyable, it cannot be denied that the tour was very exhausting. The days had to be filled so terribly full. It was indeed a great and continuous strain, especially on anyone so unsparing of her own vitality as the young duchess, and all her companions speak in the highest praise of the indomitable spirit she showed, of her ceaseless consideration for others, and efforts to save them from fatigues she never sought to spare herself.

She could never bear to disappoint expectation, and when her doctor, pronouncing her to be suffering from a severe attack of tonsilitis, absolutely forbade her to accompany her husband to South Island, it was a very real grief to her.

The Duke and Duchess of York are here shown in Jamaica when they were shown on a tour of British dominions

Certainly she had done her best to fight circumstances, for before succumbing to this illness, she had behaved with really dangerous fortitude. For three days, she had with Spartan stoicism concealed her severe sufferings and, with a very high temperature, of which she had told no one, uncomplainingly motored from dawn to dusk along dusty roads, smiling as radiantly as ever, and firmly refusing even to have the hood of the car put up.

Concealed Illness

Her escort began to suspect her illness only through noticing that she talked less than usual and silently accepted the decisions of others without that friendly argumentativeness which is natural to her.

Equally characteristic was the fact that, however fierce the rays of the sun, she would always defiantly persist in wearing a hat with an upturned brim so that her face should never be hidden from the crowd.

From first to last this Empire Tour was a triumphal success, and when the royal party embarked for the return voyage on the Renown, the Prime Minister of Australia telegraphed the following tribute to the departing Prince: "The personality of yourself and the Duchess have brought vividly before us the tie that binds us to our kinsmen overseas. As an Ambassador of the Empire you have brought the mother country closer to Australia."

The climax of the Duke and Duchess' empire mission was when at Canberra, where a crowd of 50,000 had assembled, the Duke, on behalf of his father, opened the Federal Parliament at its first meeting in its new home.

Fishing on Program

In spite of their full program the Duke and Duchess did manage to find time for a little fishing. The Duchess had the satisfaction of landing an eight-pound rainbow trout, and the Duke the thrill of hooking a shark in the Bay of Islands.

During their whole tour of New Zealand, perhaps the most picturesque episode was the display of outlandish dances (one was supposed to represent a pig in search of a wife!) given by the Maoris at Rotorua, where the crust of the earth is so thin that a law has been made forbidding anyone to dig deeper than four feet. In this extraordinary region seething pools of muddy water boil and bubble by the roadside, and if the ground is prodded great clouds of steam fill the air. So extreme are the varieties of temperature in the waters here that it is said you can catch a trout in one pool and overcook it in the next!

First Lady Urges Farm Youth To Elect Thinkers to Office

Delegates to the National Conference on Problems of Farm Youth were urged by Mrs. Roosevelt yesterday to elect representatives who have the intellectual honesty to do a lot of thinking. She said that intellectual honesty was harder, sometimes, than the other kind of honesty.

Mrs. Roosevelt remained after her address on "Farm Youth and Their Part in the Government," to hear discussion on "Finding Our Places." She urged the delegates, who came from more than a score of States, to avoid sectionalism, and to study the trends in all sections of the Nation.

Conference leaders said there was a marked difference of opinion among the delegates over any back-to-the-land movement. Robert Clark, of Iowa, said that before the land idea can be sold to anyone there must be a "definite desire for the land" in the person's mind.

Inspection Bill's Repeal Urged

Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor of Maryland yesterday was asked by George Keneipp, manager of the Keystone Automobile Club, to veto a bill requiring 400,000 motorists to pay for annual mechanical inspection of their cars at State-operated stations.

Anne Lewis to Address Library Association

46,000 Alumni Give Sociologists Debate Topic

The U. S. Office of Education has questioned 46,000 college alumni from 31 institutions of higher learning to find out how they have fared since commencement. Among the findings:

College men tend to marry earlier and in larger proportion than college women. Western college graduates marry sooner and in larger proportion than those from any other section.

The largest proportion of children is found in families of Western men alumni and the smallest proportion in the families of Eastern women alumni. Children resulting from marriage of 12,233 men graduates number 7,727; from marriage of 6,359 women, 3,463.

The college alumni divorce rate is low when compared with that of the country as a whole. The alumni rate in the study over the period 1928 to 1935 is 19 divorces per 1,000 marriages. More college women than college men are divorced.

Men tend to find work eventually in line with their specialization in college. Women find their work less in line with their major college study. Few of either sex have had to rely on relief. Ninety-eight per cent of the men and 99 per cent of the women managed to keep off relief.

Men alumni have the better of it in salary scales, but older women receive more than the younger male alumni, generally. The figures:

The average college man out of school one year receives a typical salary of $1,314; the graduate out of school two years, $1,455; three years, $1,531; four years, $1,684; five years, $1,847; six years, $2,008; seven years, $2,138, and eight years, $2,383. Women graduates receive salaries ranging from $1,092 the first year out of college to $1,606 the eighth year.
